WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

REVEILLE.

War of the Revolution — Forts and Defenses — Discipline and Equipment — Committee of Safety — Roster of the 15th Regiment of Militia — Riflemen and Rangers — Prison Report — Casualties — Roll of Honor — Brothers in the Revolution — Queer Names — Index of Names.

If "he that ruleth his own spirit is mightier than he who taketh a city," the private soldier must be entitled to recognition in a measure equal to his services. There are heroes and there have been heroes, but not all of them are mentioned in history, song and monumental inscriptions. Service without sacrifice cannot be called heroism, although many have risen to be honored, by popular applause, who have sacrificed nothing; having no regard for the rights of others. Believing that the private soldier, in all American wars, who did his full duty in a patriotic spirit, is equally entitled to recognition with those of superior rank, and that his name and position in the military history of the past should not be lost and forgotten, I have attempted this work without excuse or apology. The veterans and their friends will not forget that those who fought to maintain the rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" are entitled the fullest measure of honor and respect. Proper honors shown to a worthy servant or benefactor cannot be compassed by a banquet, the blare of trumpets, or the thunder of artillery. Such spasms subside as the sound dies away, and the smoke disappears, while the recipient of the ovation may often be found behind the procession or paying the bills. One hundred and fifteen years have elapsed since war was declared against the American Colonies by England, and yet, after an active service of five years, even the names of each militia man of this county cannot be obtained without great pains and doubt. Provision has been made by our law-makers to make a roster, and record of term of service, of those who served in the several wars, but like many just and important laws, the incomplete execution, or a failure wholly, on the part of those intrusted with the work, leaves our sources of information as meager, unsatisfactory and perplexing. In the prosecution of this work I have had but one object in view — the military record of every citizen of Schoharie county whose home was in the county when he entered the service. I recognize the right of any one to make the same effort and to enjoy any honors belonging to it. I admit my interest to be personal, as gratifying a “hobby,” but deny a purpose to profit otherwise. If I please myself and at the same time perform a service for others, I see no occasion to make empty excuses or fawning platitudes.

The greatest hero is he who divides an honor with his comrades; the greatest coward, he who ascribes all honor to himself. I disclaim any honor in giving my comrades their due; I repudiate the title of coward, as I have not aspired to honors or popularity. Being personally satisfied with my work, through doing all in my power, I shall greatly regret any just cause for any dissatisfaction among my comrades living or the friends of those dead.

But few of the graves of Revolutionary men can be found to-day, and fewer still have epitaph or sign. Their names are dropping out of the roll of memory and their descendants remember but little or none of the traditions of their services. With the men of 1812 we stand on nearer ground, as many of their children are with us. The men of the Mexican war from this county were but a handful, and the prosecution of that war was not highly creditable to our government. I have embodied in the records of the veterans such facts and data as has been in my power to gather, and such information as their friends and descendants have been able or willing to give me. The survivors of the Union Army live in the memories of the past. Those who were fortunate or unfortunate enough to survive the havoc of battle, the hardships of the march, or the hell of prison life, and endured and suffered in an humble capacity, and made their sacrifices through patriotism, are not especially mentioned in “Orders” at the present day, nor are they called ten paces to the front to receive honors at our “dress parades.” A vast army has passed over the graves of those who perished and the weary and fainting bodies of those who survive, and in its struggle for gain and honors, is fast losing respect for the survivors of the skirmish line which cleared the way. Words do not win battles, in honorable warfare. Words may win fame and popularity, but I question the honor or right when the silent servant is obscured by the joy raised by the trumpeter.

The People of the State of New York, by the Grace of God FREE and INDEPENDENT—Greeting; We reposing special Trust and Confidence as well in your Patriotism, Conduct and Loyalty, as in your Valor and Readiness to do us good and faithful Service, Have appointed and constituted, and by these Presents Do, appoint and constitute you the Said Johnathan Bixby, Captain of the Company of Militia in the Beat wherein you reside, in the Regt. whereof Peter Van Ness Esquire, is Col.

You are therefore to take the said Company into your charge and care as Captain thereof and duly to exercise the Officers and Soldiers of that Company in Arms, who are hereby commanded to obey you as their Captain, and you are also to Observe and follow such Orders and Directions as you shall from time to time receive from our General and Commander-in-chief of the Militia of our said State, or any other your Superior Officer, According to the Rules and discipline of War, in pursuance of the Trust reposed in you, and for so doing This shall be Your Commission, for and during our good pleasure, to be Signified by our Council of appointments. In Testimony whereof, we have caused our Seal for Military Commissions to be hereunto Affixed. Witness our Trusty and well beloved George Clinton Esquire, our Governor of our State of New York, General and Commander in chief of all the Militia, and Admiral of the Navy of the same, by and with the Advice and Consent of our said Council of Appointment, at Poughkeepsie the twenty eighth day of May in the second year of our Independence, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy eight. Passed the Secretarys Office.

The 15th June 1778.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

Previous to the declaration of war against the American Colonies by England, several of the inhabitants of the county had served in the British cause against the French, and a few were holding official positions in the Colonial Militia through commissions from the King: notably, Peter B. Vroman and Adam Chrysler. Late in the year 1775 an enrollment was made of men for service against the Crown, and in defense of the rights of the Colonists. Vroman espoused the Patriot cause and was commissioned commander of the Militia in what is now Schoharie county. His neighbor, Adam Chrysler, adhered to the cause of the King and was given a captaincy, and the command of the few Tories and Indians who were induced to make war against the Patriots. Like all men who turn against the apparently weaker party, in the expectation of gaining position and profit, his acts and methods were revengeful and barbarous. From the time of the settlement of the valley of Schoharie and its tributary sections—Cobleskill, Turlach and the Fox Creek Valley, until the invasion of 1777, the inhabitants had worked industriously to build up houses and increase their resources and incomes. So well had they succeeded, that they were able to produce for others, and the surplus wheat from Schoharie valley became one of the important factors of assistance to the Provincial government.

The products of the valley and the homes and lives of its inhabitants became objects for the care and protection of the home rulers, and at the same time, marked subjects for the torch, tomahawk, and scalping-knife of the foreign aggressor. Just previous to and at the time of the first invasion of the valley the sentiments or politics of the inhabitants became pronounced, and the distinction between Tory and Rebel neighbors became marked. Brother opposing brother, and son against father, in several instances. The Rebel of the Revolution was the man who had, and whose ancestors had, labored to make a home in a new land, and not only believed in his rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," but that the preservation of all the fruits of his toil, and his freedom to enjoy them, depended on resisting an avaricious and exacting foreign power to the last. A Tory of the Revolution was that ubiquitous thing, existing in every period of the world's history, who had no patriotism and less courage, and who hoped for success of the powerful invader, that he might be allotted the lands and home of his thrifty neighbor, as a reward for being a scoundrel. The term "Tory" is supposed to be of Irish derivation, and meaning "a robber." If the descendants of the Palatinates and others who settled in Schoharie county had cause for hatred of England previous to the Revolution, we may infer that they had far greater cause for hatred when that power, their so-called foster father, employed savage Indians to despoil their homes, murder their children, and kill, scalp or lead into captivity the men who defended their new homes against foreign oppression. When Tory neighbors sheltered and entertained their savage allies, and gave "aid and comfort" to the enemy of our "Deutsche" ancestry, the "donner vetter blixen, und ver dom," consigned the Tory to eternal disgrace. In the beginning of the year 1776, two delegates from Schoharie met with the General Council at Albany to devise plans for mutual safety and protection, and to make public declaration of their allegiance to American Independence, and opposition to the acts of the British Parliament. In June of the same year a local "Committee of Safety," of six persons, was appointed to order and regulate the affairs of public interest. As vacancies occurred in this board or committee, from time to time, during the six years in which its existence was a necessity, new appointments were made, so that historians tell us fourteen of the prominent men of that day served as "Committee Men" during the war.

In 1775 a regiment of Militia was organized in the Albany district, which included three companies from Schoharie under Colonel Vroman, who with the commissioned officers of the three companies received their appointments Oct. 20th of that year. A fourth company was organized in the Cobleskill in 1777, and in 1778 a fifth company was enrolled in the "Turlach" settlement; but owing to predominating Toryism, the company disbanded; some of its members being attached to the Fourth and First Companies; others serving as scouts and rangers; while a few were enrolled in the Tryon County Militia. The four companies were assigned to the Fifteenth Regiment of Militia and Levies of New York. They served on detail and detachments along the Mohawk until the fore part of the year 1777, when they were recalled, and held in readiness for an expected invasion of the valley.

On the 7th of July, 1777, a general order was issued, requiring the posting of sentinels, and such stringent military regulations as the peril of the times demanded. After such preparations had been made as to give a greater feeling of security, a part of the Militia were again detached to join General Gates, who was then opposing the British under Burgoyne. But, suddenly, the inhabitants of the valley were aroused from their fancied security, by the approach of the British Captain McDonald with twenty-eight Regulars. The invading force being joined by a party of Tories and Indians under Adam Chrysler, numbered, according to Simms, about one hundred men. The alarmed Colonists dispatched messengers to Albany, for assistance, who were followed by Colonel Harper, who had just arrived in the valley, and who commanded the defenses in this valley and all the outposts to the south and west. Colonel Harper secured a reinforcement of a company of cavalry and proceeded to Schoharie, where he was joined by the remaining Militia, and then proceeded as far as Boucks Island, meeting the enemy in ambush at the Chrysler farm, north of what is now the Boucks Island Ferry. The Patriots were met by an unexpected volley from the enemy, who were immediately routed by a charge of the cavalry, which closed the engagement. This first battle in Schoharie county took place Aug. 14, 1777, and as before stated, near the upper limit of the present village of Fultonham. The loss to the Patriots was one man of the cavalry killed, and two of the Militia wounded; one mortally. During the latter part of the year 1777, three forts or stockades were built in the valley, as described elsewhere. In the latter part of May, 1778, spies of the enemy were discovered in the vicinity of Cobleskill. Captain Christian Brown, commanding the Fourth Company of Militia, dispatched a messenger to the lower fort for assistance, and was reinforced by Captain Patrick with forty men of the Continental Army.—SIMMS.*

The combined force of the Patriots is given as fifty-seven men. Captain Patrick, being in command of the troops, proceeded up the valley as far as the house of George Warner, Sr., then standing in what is now Warnerville and opposite the intersection of the Hynds-ville road. From this place the enemy could be seen skulking farther up the valley. It must be remembered that the inhabitants of these valleys lived with Indian neighbors for many years, and had become familiar with their tricks and devices, so that when now and then an Indian discovered himself, they rightly feared it to be a ruse to lead them into a trap. With the commander it was otherwise. He led his little band directly into the snare prepared by Chief Brandt, and, suddenly as the burst of a suppressed volcano, the fire of two hundred rifles was poured in the faces of his little band. After the volley from the enemy, the surviving Patriots sprang to trees, to contend with the foe on more equal footing; but a breathing spell revealed the hopelessness of the situation. Patrick with nearly one-half of the entire force had been killed or mortally wounded ; the enemy outnumbered them six to one, and total extinction appeared near at hand. Realizing this, Captain Brown ordered those remaining to retreat. The enemy, in pursuit, burned the Warner house and two men within, who had stopped in the retreat, and were using it as a barricade, and continuing their fire on the enemy from the windows. The strength of the enemy on this occasion has been given as two hundred ; their loss not given. The Patriot loss had been given as twenty-two Continentals killed and eight wounded, five Militia killed and three wounded. A part of these losses were sustained after the retreat began, as the Patriots contested the way for some time afterward.*

*I find but one "Captain Patrick" in the roster of New York troops, both Militia and Continental; Samuel Patrick was commissioned captain of the Cantshook Company in the East Orange or Cornwall Regiment of Militia in Feb., 1776. No mention of his death is made in the roster.

In an old register of the Lutheran Church of Schoharie, now in possession of Mrs. Martin Luther Shafer, and which I was kindly permitted to examine, I find in the records of deaths under date of May 29, 1778, the names of the five men killed at the "battle of Cobleskill." Without doubt, the battle of Cobleskill occurred on the 29th of May, 1778. Brandt followed up his victory by burning houses and other property belonging to the Patriots, sparing only such as the resident Tories hoped to come into possession of through confiscation. The Patriots and their families fled to the lower fort or concealed themselves in the forests and in the bushes along the banks of the streams.

The result of this conflict compelled the inhabitants, except Tories, to abandon their homes and take up their residence at the Lower Fort. It also encouraged their Tory neighbors to commit more open acts of hostility. From this time forth the small Militia force was reinforced by different bodies of Militia from adjoining districts. Late in the year, a block-house was erected, under the supervision of Colonel DuBoise, at the present eastern limit of the village of Cobleskill, and during the winter this officer made the head-quarters of his regiment at Schoharie. In May, 1780, Chrysler with a small band appeared in Turlach, now Seward, captured nine prisoners and returned to Canada. On August 8, following, he appeared in the Vroman's land, burned a few houses, murdered a few inhabitants and captured thirty prisoners. Previous to the raids of May and June, and in April of the same year, a party of thirteen men, under the command of Captain Alexander Harper, who had been sent to the head of the Delaware to "make maple sugar" and overlook the conduct of suspected persons residing in that vicinity, were surprised, three killed, and the remainder taken prisoners by Chief Brandt, with a strong party of Indians and Tories. Returning in the same year to October 17, we find Colonel Johnson, of the British Army, stealing past the Upper Fort at daylight, at the head of about one thousand Regulars, Indians and Tories, with the intent of capturing the Middle Fort and laying waste the entire valley. His forces were discovered by Peter Feek, who hastened to the Upper Fort and gave the alarm. The "warning gun" was fired, and the forces at the Middle Fort, being apprised of their danger, prepared for action; while Johnson, aware that he was discovered, began the work of destruction — burning houses, barns and grain stacks, and stealing horses and cattle. Previous to this time a company of riflemen had been sent to reinforce the Schoharie Militia. Of this company the famous Murphey and Ellerson were members, and were among the defenders of the Middle Fort, and were of the party sent out as skirmishers, previous to the investment of the fort. Johnson opened the attack by firing shells from a small mortar, and solid shot from a small field piece which had been carried in parts, and had been remounted before the attack. The solid shot passed over, and beyond the fort, while the shells from the mortar did no farther damage than frightening an invalid lady to death, and covering a frightened old bachelor with feathers. Following his bombardment, Johnson sent a flag of truce in an attempt to gain some knowledge of the strength of the fort and the number of its defenders. But at each of two or more trials, the flag was fired upon before the bearer could approach near enough to gain the desired information. According to the evidence of history, Murphey fired on the flag at its first appearance, and Martinus Zielie on the second; while Murphey held his fire to shoot Major Woolsey in case he attempted to execute his threat, "to run the man through who fired on the flag again." This "Major Woolsey" is spoken of as a "Continental officer." At the time above referred to he was a major in Colonel Dubois' regiment of Militia, but, previous to being commissioned in the regiment, he had been appointed ensign of a company in the Fourth Battalion of the Line authorized by Congress in 1776. He carried the attractive name of Melancthon Lloyd Woolsey and no doubt was a "hellum fellow" on dress parade, but Murphey and the spunky Dutchmen at the Middle Fort would not recognize his authority to surrender their scalps to Johnson and his Indian followers.

*In Author Simms' First History the date of the battle of Cobleskill is given as June 1, 1778. In his later work, "The Frontiers of New York," he gives the same date, but in a foot-note he quotes an extract from "Campbell's Annals," which fixes the date of the battle at May 29.

After his failure to gain a knowledge of affairs within the fort, Johnson resumed his firing for a short time, and then departed down the valley, destroying and driving away the property of the Patriots, and sparing that of the Tories. Author Simms estimates the number engaged in the defense of the Middle Fort at between three and four hundred. At the Lower Fort, Johnson found the Rebels "at home," and prepared to receive him with their "Grasshopper" at the gate, and their riflemen in the tower. Contenting himself with a brief halt, and a few shots from his artillery, he passed on to near Sloansville, where he encamped for the night. On the following morning, Colonel Vroman, with as many men as could be safely spared from the forts, started in pursuit, picking off stragglers and harassing Johnson's rear as far as the Mohawk. On the same day, the 18th, and while the Patriots were in pursuit of Johnson, Philip Chrysler, with Seths Henry and a band of Tories and Indians, appeared in Turlach, murdered Merclay, Catharine, his niece, and two boys, and with three white children and several slaves as prisoners, made their retreat to Niagara, by way of Charlotte Valley. In November, 1781, another raid was made on Vroman's land by Chrysler, in which he succeeded in killing one man, Isaac Vroman, and stealing several head of cattle and horses, and burning two houses. The raiders were overtaken on the following day near Jefferson Lake by a small force of Schoharie Militia under Captain Hager, and a company of Militia of the Ninth Battalion under Captain Hale. Owing to the cowardice of Hale, Hager was compelled to fall back, after making an attack. Through the efforts of Hager and Murphey, Hale and his forces were rallied, and upon the arrival of Colonel Vroman with an additional force of forty men, the pursuit was continued until the trail was lost, when the Patriots returned to the valley. During the September previous, a party of Indians under the leadership of a "Tory from New Rhinebeck" — that neighborhood now known as Lawyersville — made a second raid through the Cobleskill Valley, and burned all the houses except the dwellings of Peter and John Shafer, and the recently erected Fort Duboise.

On the 10th of July, 1781, an engagement took place in the present town of Sharon between forces under Colonel Willett, and a plundering party of Tories and Indians under one Docksteder. But few Schoharie men were engaged in this affair, such as lived in the western limits and were enrolled under Willett. From the latter part of 1781 until the declaration of peace, the settlements of Schoharie escaped further invasion, although an attempt to capture Major Becker was made on July 26, 1782, and in December following, George Warner, Sr., was captured and taken to Canada.

It is to be hoped that some one will rise up and be equal to the task of writing a full and connected account of the troubles and trials of our ancestors. From the foregoing and the "Personal Records" hereafter given, we find precedents confirming England as the "Old Oppressor. The tomahawk, war club, scalping knife and prison ships, stimulated by British gold, were her instruments for subjugation during the Revolution. At a later day, the binding of rebellious Sepoys to the muzzles of cannon, to be blown to shreds, was a punishment for rebelling against her avarice. The prison pens of Belle Isle, Salisbury, Andersonville and Florence and the bloodshed and woe which followed the unfurling of the "Stars and Bars" were but the consequences of her sympathy, encouragement and gobbling propensities; while to-day we find her proffering golden guineas, as purchase-money for American industries, and for the scalps of American workmen. In giving the personal record of the Revolutionary men of Schoharie there are many omissions; many interesting facts and dates being beyond recovery. It is a roll call of the dead. In some cases I have endeavored to gather facts from conflicting testimony, and may have arrived at erroneous conclusions.

FORTS AND DEFENSES OF THE REVOLUTION.

The Lower Fort.

In 1772, the people living at and in the vicinity of the present village of Schoharie made common cause in the erection of a place for worship, by contributing money, labor, and material. The result of their efforts stands on the eastern limit of the village and is known as the "Old Stone Fort." Five years after its erection it was selected as a place of defense against threatened invasions, and it was inclosed by a stockade, within which temporary shelter was provided for the families and non-combatants residing in the neighborhood. From its tower much of the surrounding country could be overlooked, and as was the case during Johnson's raid, riflemen could make it unsafe for the enemy to approach from any direction.

The "Stone Church" was used for some years after the Revolution as a house of worship, and later as an arsenal, having become the property of the State. At a recent date, title was conveyed by the State to the county, and afterward by the county to the Scholarie County Historical Society, as a museum of antiquities. It appears that, after the completion of the building, many who contributed toward its erection employed the masons or "boss" mason, to carve their names on the more conspicuous stones, charging for the work a sum which other contributors considered exorbitant, and would not pay; feeling it to be unjust, after contributing to the work. We are then to infer that the names of all who assisted in building this historical edifice are not inscribed on it. It is unfortunate, indeed, that the name of every person who assisted in the building of this well-preserved relic of Revolutionary times cannot be given.

After a lapse of one hundred and eighteen years some of these inscriptions appear as if cut within a decade. Johannis Ball, Peter Ball, Jacob Bartholomew, George Becker, Johannis Becker, Willem Brown, Archibald Camell, Christina Cambell, Josiah Clark, William Dietz B. M., Johannis Dietz, John Dominick, Johannes Enders, William Enders, Peter Enders, Jacob Enders, Jacob Enders, Jr., John Eckerson, Wilhelm Hammer, Johannes Lawyer, Esq., Christina Lawyer, Marcus Rickert, Johannes Rickert, Catharina Rickert, Nicholas Rickert, Christian Richtmyer, Peter Schneider B. M., Jacob Schneyder, Philip Schnyler, Johan Schnyler, Anna Schuyler, Peter Schuyler, Dennis Swart, Bartho's Swart, Josias Swart, Gertruy Swart, Lorens Schuleraft, Harmonius Sittenich, Bartholmeus Vroman, Anna Ziellie, Adam Zimmer, Jacob Zimmer, Henry Werth, Johannes Werth, Maria Elizabeth Werth.

The Middle Fort.

About one-half mile east of the railroad depot, and a few rods to the left of the railway, as you approach Middleburg, stands the stone kitchen of the house of Johannes Becker, a "well-to-do" man at the time of the Revolution. Owing to its size and strength, and perhaps the interest felt by the proprietor, this building was selected as the "citadel" of the "Middle Fort" and which, tradition tells us, was inclosed, with two or three acres of land, by a stockade. Within the stockade, and around the Becker Mansion, were erected temporary barracks and dwellings for the troops sent from abroad to assist the home guards, and for the accommodation of the families living in the vicinity, during an expected invasion. Nothing remains of the Middle Fort to day but a little stone kitchen. The imagination must create the rest. Here the "Bowld Soger Boys" from the outside world came from time to time to show their military skill and buttons, eat the "kraut" and "liverwurst" provided by the "gutefrans," and flirt with the Low Dutch lassies. Within this stockade, Bartholomew C. Vroman espoused his cousin Susanna, and from its gate, Lieutenant Boyd went forth to meet the fulfillment of the curse pronounced upon him by the girl whom he had betrayed, and whose honor he refused to restore.

The Upper Fort.

Go with me, on foot if you like, from Middleburg to a point on the Fultonham road, a little over half way between the lower and upper village; then look square to the left, and at a distance of nearly half a mile, and you will see an apple tree standing on a small knoll. This knoll is the original Feek burial-ground, and near it stood the dwelling of Johannes Feek, which was inclosed by a stockade and called the Upper Fort. This fort was at no time seriously assaulted; its commander being well known by the enemy as a good man to keep away from. In the ground referred to lie the ashes of the mutilated bodies of Captain Teunis Vroman, his wife and son, and of the wife and daughter of Lieutenant Ephraim Vroman. No line or letter is found to designate the resting-place of any except one, 1770, Marget Feek.

Fort Duboise.

After the battle of Cobleskill, the Patriots of the valley were compelled to seek shelter and protection for their families with the people at the Lower Fort, to the great inconvenience of all. In the spring and summer of 1781 a fort or large block-house was built, at what is now the eastern limit of the village of Cobleskill, under the supervision of Colonel Lewis Duboise. We read that it was inclosed by a paling or stockade, and which also inclosed the house of Peter Shafer. This fort served the families of some of the Patriots in good stead during a second invasion of the valley, and a better security against their Tory neighbors, to whom they had become openly hostile.

A block-house, sufficiently strong to protect inmates from ordinary attacks, and provided with loopholes or spaces cut in the logs, through which a fire could be directed upon the enemy, was built at or near the present site of Central Bridge.

DISCIPLINE AND EQUIPMENT OF SCHOHARIE MILITIA.

On the 7th of July, 1777, a general order from the "Committee of Safety" was issued, requiring sentinels to be kept posted at four specified stations, and imposing a fine upon those who neglected to serve on such duty. The details for service of this kind were made no doubt from the enrollment on the "turn and turnabout" system. The order also required, that "all persons between the ages of sixteen and fifty years" should "bring their arms and accoutrements, when they attend meeting on Sunday or any other day," under penalty of a fine of "three shillings New York currency." Under the Militia bill passed by the Provincial Congress of New York, August 22, 1775, all company officers were to be elected by votes of the privates, and two members of the Committee of Safety were to conduct the election. The officers of the company were: One captain, two lieutenants, one ensign, four sergeants, four corporals, one clerk, one drummer, and one fifer. It will be seen that the commissioned and non-commissioned officers were the same in number in the Revolution, as in the last war, except in the case of corporals. Being Militia and home guards, perhaps each corporal had a duplicate at home, and in that case "we corporals" would be properly represented in all wars. The bill, before referred to, further required that "every man between the ages of sixteen and fifty, do, with all convenient speed, furnish himself with a good musket or firelock, and bayonet, sword or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming wire and brush fitted thereto, a cartouch box to contain twenty-three rounds of cartridges, twelve flints, and a knapsack agreeable to the directions of the Continental Congress, under forfeiture of five shillings for the want of a musket or firelock, and of one shilling for the want of a bayonet, sword or tomahawk, cartridge box, cartridge or bullet, the whole to be judged by the captain or next commanding officer." "That each company do meet the first Monday in every month and spend four hours in each of the said days to perfect themselves in military discipline." "That at least twice a year the captains of every company of Militia shall deliver to the colonel of the regiment a true and complete roll containing the names of all the men belonging to his company." Militia or "general" training days of fifty years ago are well remembered by the old boys of the present day. They remember the fierce fellow with the gun and bayonet who "cleared the ground," the long strings of men who

"right wheeled," "left wheeled" and went ahead, the galloping "ginerals," the shouting colonels, the ramrod majors, the fuming captains, the blustering ensign, the sergeants and corporals, scarcely visible, and above all, the "gineral training ginger bread."

It is told of a certain lieutenant who became dissatisfied with the military bearing of one of his men, while on drill during the last war, and instructed him in this way—"drow oudt yer schdumiek,—look fierce,— look like hell, — look like me!" We can easily imagine how warlike the Schoharie Militia appeared on their parade ground, and how sturdily Johannes, Pieter, Joost, Stoffel, and Hendricus stamped the ground when "der gommebanie" made "der richt veel." For was not Eve Ann, Peggy, Gertruy Christina and Jannetie standing by the fence to see them "côom roundt." The homespun uniform of our ancestors, the rude mechanism of their arms, and the clumsiness of their movements on parade, would no doubt excite derision from the dainty Militiaman of the present day, but we should remember that men stood in the ranks of that rough soldiery and gave us a home of our own.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

In the selections made by our forefathers, we find that they were wise, and that but one of the number chosen proved false to the trust. Although several members of this committee were not enrolled and did not perform such military duty as the term might imply, their services as a war committee appear so intimately connected with the services of those who did bear arms, that I give them a place in the military family.

Johannes Ball, Chairman, was chosen chairman at the organization of the committee, and held that position during the war. He was a marked man from the first, and a subject for capture or assassination, but escaped all harm, though at times in an apparently providential manner. The date of his death I have been unable to obtain. Two sons, Peter and Mattice, were enrolled in the First Company, as will be found. It is evident that his services as a war statesman were invaluable, and if tradition be true that he was the father of twenty-two children, he was not the man to yield to a King. A great grandson and grandson of Peter, George Ball of Sharon, survives him. William Ball of Schoharie and Harvey Ball of Esperance are grandsons of Chairman Ball and his second wife.

Pieter—Peter Vrooman, Colonel, retained his position on the committee, as secretary, during its existence.

Joseph Becker

with his three brothers were enrolled in the service and are accounted for in the roster.

George Warner, Sr.,

was born in Wittenberg, Germany, June 24, 1720, removed to America at the age of twenty-four, and at the time of the Revolution lived at what is now Warnerville, and had three sons, Nicholas and Geo., Jr., enrolled in the service, and David, "a lad of twelve years." Efforts to capture him failed until December 9, 1782, when "Seths Henry" with a party of six Indians, who had been sent from Canada, through heavy snow, for the express purpose, succeeded in taking him and his son Nicholas prisoners. The party encamped for the night near what is now Richmondville, and at the entrance to Brooker Hollow. Late in the night Nicholas escaped, but his father remained a prisoner and followed his captors to Canada. From Niagara he was sent to "Rebel Island" and given parole liberty. During his captivity he was treated with comparative kindness, and after remaining eleven months and being sworn to secrecy, he was exchanged. Died June, 1815, aged 95. His wife Dorsa died May, 1817, aged 91.

A great-great-grandson, Lieutenant Geo. W. Snyder, U. S. A., died in the service during the war for the Union. His grandsons Marcus and John Warner served in the war of 1812. Granddaughter, Mrs. John Hynds. Great-grandson Sylvester Warner. Great-great-grandson, Marcus D.

Peter U. Zielie, Lieutenant-Colonel.

Joseph Borst,

served in the Militia and accounted for.

Peter Becker,

enrolled in Captain Becker's company for service abroad.

Peter Swart,

no positive data concerning this man. It is barely possible that he was the "Peter Swart, ensign," who was very young at the beginning of the war.

William Zimmer,

"of Breakabeen," is referred to by Simms as proving disloyal to the Patriots.

William Dietz

had a son William, Jr., enrolled for service.

Samuel Vroman,

a merchant, resided in Lower Vroman's Land, and enrolled for service. Father of "Susannah."

Adam Vroman,

supposed to have been a grandson of Adam the first, and son of the first Peter, and grand or great-grandfather of Dow J. Vroman of Middleburg, N. Y. Died October 28, 1822, aged 88.

Jacob Zimmer

resided in the eastern portion of the county. Had four sons, Peter, George, Adam and William,—not the committeeman—enrolled for service. Great granddaughters, Lovina Bigelow, Elmina Weidman.

Nicholas Sternberg

had four sons enrolled for service — Abram, David, Jacob and Lambert. Grandsons surviving, Abraham of Seward and Levi.

Sebastian France

has been referred to in one instance as a committeeman, but I find nothing more to corroborate the statement. It is very probable that he was consulted on matters of interest to the Patriots, as he was a firm supporter of their cause, and resided in a Tory neighborhood.

THE ROSTER.

During the Revolution an enrollment of Militia was made at several different times, and where a detachment or detail was made up for special service, a special company roll was no doubt kept. When the members of the Cobleskill company were obliged to make their head-quarters at Schoharie they were again enrolled under Captain Stubrach in the First Company. Many members of the First and Third Companies were enrolled alternately under the two captains. In making up the roster of State troops for the archives of the Revolution, the editor evidently had the different muster-rolls to compile from, and put down every name he found regardless of evident repetition, or like the Irishman at Donnybrook fair, hit a head when he saw it. In the roster of Schoharie Militia he has multiplied, in this way, the actual number by two or more. I have endeavored by careful investigation to muster each man but once, and in his proper company, and credit him with service in other companies, if he evidently served elsewhere. The service of many of these men extended no farther than a compliance with the regulations existing, serving as sentinels or as messengers, a fact which may be referred to when there is no special mention of service. The descendants of many have passed beyond discovery, while those of others are unable to give their generation, and the name of their Revolutionary ancestor. The date of death of many cannot be found, no record being kept, and no epitaph set up.

ROLL CALL OF THE REVOLUTION.

FIELD AND STAFF—FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK MILITIA.

Pieter — Peter Vroman, Colonel,

born in 1736, commissioned captain under the Crown and served against the French on the frontier. Before the Revolution he was made major of Militia, but when war was declared, he espoused the cause of the Colonies and was commissioned colonel of Militia by the Provincial Congress of New York, from date of October 20, 1775, remaining in command of the Militia from the beginning to the close of the war, except when reinforcements were sent to the valley, and when the immediate command of the troops was transferred to the visiting commandant by reason of courtesy, or seniority of rank. During Johnson's invasion he took part in the defense of the Middle Fort by issuing the ammunition himself, that the men might not know the scantiness of the supply, and encouraging them to make every shot count. On this occasion he rebuked Major Woolsey for cowardice, and assumed the command himself. In addition to his military service, he held the office of Secretary for the Committee of Safety, served as delegate to the General Committee, and filled other important positions of trust. Died December 29, 1793, leaving but one child, a daughter. Great-grandchildren, Wm. Dietz, Nancy Merrill, Louisa Boughton, Kate Brown, Mrs. Harry Hull and Mrs. John Mann. Great-great-grandson, Henry Cady.

Pieter — Peter U. Zielie, Lieutenant-Colonel,

resided near the Middle Fort. Was appointed lieutenant-colonel, October 20, 1775, and re-appointed February 20, 1778. He accompanied the troops in the attack on McDonald and Chrysler, and assisted in the defense of the Middle Fort at the time of Johnson's invasion. He was also a member of the Committee of Safety. Died February 26, 1798, aged 51 years, leaving two daughters.

Thomas Eckerson, Jr., First Major,

resided at Middleburgh; received his appointment, October 20, 1775; re-appointed to same rank, February 20, 1778, and continued in same grade until the close of the war. Served with the forces from the Middle Fort. Date of death not positively known; supposed to be January 12, 1806.

Joost — Joseph Becker, Second Major,

resided east of the Lower Fort and one mile west of Gallupville. He was one of four brothers in the Militia service. Was commissioned October 20, 1775, and re-appointed February 20, 1778. During Johnson's invasion, he commanded the forces at the Lower Fort, and conducted the defense with such spirit as to cause Johnson to "pass by on the other side." On July 26, 1782, an attempt to capture him at his home, was made by a party of Indians under Chrysler. Assisted by his wife, George Shell, and John Hutt, he defended his home with such obstinacy and loss to the enemy, that they were obliged to return to Canada without the major, whom they had come so far to capture. Died August 21, 1806, aged 68. Great-grandson, Rufus Posson.

Lorrens — Lawrence Schoolcraft — Schulecraft, Sr., Adjutant,

resided at Schoharie. Appointed adjutant, October 20, 1775, and reappointed February 20, 1778. He contributed to the erection of the Lower Fort.

Pieter — Peter Ball, Q. M.,

resided at Schoharie. Appointed quarter-master, February 20, 1778. In addition to regimental duties he superintended the transportation of the surplus wheat raised in the valley to the Continental supply stations at Albany, and posts farther north. Died June 19, 1838, aged 85. Grandsons, George, Barnabas. Great-grandson, Frederick.

FIRST COMPANY, FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK LEVIES AND MILITIA.

Christian Stubrach, Captain,

resided at Knieskerns Dorf or Central Bridge. Was appointed first lieutenant, October 20, 1775. Promoted to captain, February 20, 1778. He was quite wealthy, for the times, and a man of courage. Tradition claims for him second cousinship to a king of Holland. At the time of Johnson's invasion he was with his company at the Lower Fort and superintended the firing of the small field gun which Johnson styled the "Grasshopper." Although the father of ten children, there are no survivors to perpetuate the name. He died between the years 1783 and 1790, or soon after the passage of the act pensioning soldiers of the Revolution. Grandchildren, Sables Davis, Mrs. George Becker, Mrs. Isaac Schoolcraft, Mrs. Oliver Briggs.

Second Lieutenant John Dominick — Dominique, was born on the Isle De Rae, France, in the year 1740, emigrated to America in 1765, commissioned second lieutenant, October 20, 1775, and assigned to duty at the Lower Fort. Died in 1824, aged 84. Great grandchildren, Weidman, Isaac J. Barber, Mrs. John Hunting, and Mrs. Hiram Walden. A great-great-grandson, Isaac B. Walden, died in the service in the war for the Union.

Jacob Snyder, Ensign, was promoted to first lieutenant, February 20, 1778. Served under Captains Brown and Miller. Served at the Middle Fort during Johnson's raid. Married the widow of Philip Schuyler. Died 1786. Grandson, Philip Snyder.

Johannes — John Dietz, Lieutenant, promoted to second lieutenant, February 20, 1778. Did service under Captain Brown. Served at Lower Fort against Johnson. Killed by Indians in 1782.

Jacob W. Enders — Entis, Ensign, appointed ensign, February 2, 1778, but declined the commission. He did good service as scout and ranger; was one of the party who followed Johnson from the valley. After Johnson had passed the Lower Fort, Enders went gunning for an Indian who had a pack and a goose. The Indian lost his baggage, Enders lost the Indian, while a comrade got the plunder and refused to divide. He was a prominent Patriot, and an effort was made by the enemy to capture him during the latter part of the war. He never married. Near the close of his life he became partially paralytic, and was familiarly known as "Trembling Jacob." He died by accidental drowning while attempting to drink from the Schoharie creek near Breakabeen, April 4, 1848, aged 91.

Johannes — John Enders, Corporal — Entis, promoted to ensign, October 30, 1778, in place of Jacob Enders, declined. Did service under Captains Brown and Miller.

Davit — David Lawyer, Corporal, promoted from private to corporal and to ensign. Grandson, J. B. Lawyer, Washington, D. C. Great-grandchildren, Frederick C., Anna I.

Henrich — Henry Houck — Hauch, Sergeant, promoted from private to corporal and to sergeant. Served on detail under Captain Miller and again under Captain Brown. Died September 14, 1825. The father of four sons, John, Jacob, George, David, and three daughters, Nancy, Maria and Elizabeth. David living, aged 74, and Elizabeth Gardiner, aged 77. His grandson—and son of John—Jacob, has three daughters. His grandchildren and children of Jacob are John H. of Central Bridge, N. Y., and David, who served four years in the Union Army, West, and Nancy Mowers and Kate Patchen. His son George died without issue. David, now living at Howe's Cave, N. Y., has two sons and four daughters, names not given, grandchildren of Henry Houck. James Goff, a son of Maria Houck, served as an officer in the Union Army and suffered imprisonment at Libby.

Jacob Lawyer, Sergeant, promoted from private to corporal, and to sergeant, and to ensign in Captain Becker's company. Served also under Captains Brown and Richtmyer. Died February 3, 1827, aged 78. Grandchildren, Mrs. Riley, Harriett Borst. Great-grandson, Giles Mann.

Davit — David Sternberg, Sergeant, died June 8, 1828, aged 85. Great-grandchildren, Peter, William, Eve A. Best, Cassandra Morse.

William Enders — Entis, Sergeant, detached for service under Captains Brown and Miller. Served at the Lower Fort during Johnson's raid, and worked the field piece with Hendricus Shafer.

Jacob Ziegraft, Sergeant, detached from his company to serve at different times under Captains Richtmyer and Miller.

Abram Lawyer, Corporal, was on detached service at different times under Captains Hager, Ritchmyer, Miller and Becker. Died January 20, 1825, aged 66. Grandchild, Mrs. P. A. V. Bartholemew. Great-grandson, Charles Bartholemew, in the Civil war.

Jacob Kniskern, Corporal,

did detached service under Captains Richtmyer and Miller. Was captured at Moak's Hollow in "Turlach," in 1780. Made his escape from "Rebel Island," Canada, on a float constructed of two brandy kegs. Died March 9, 1818, aged 64. Grandchildren, Elizabeth, Christina, Mrs. John Warner.

Barent Vrooman, Corporal, was detached from his company for service at different times under Captains Brown, Hager, Miller and Becker and served on the frontier. Grandchildren, David, Charles, Peter, Lucian, William, Cornelius.

Peter Zimmer, Corporal, served also under Captains Brown and Miller. Was captured July 26, 1780. Paroled a short time previous to the close of the war.

George Hadsel — Hetzel, Corporal, served on detachment under Captain Miller.

Henry Hitchman — Hitzman, Corporal, served on detail under Captain Miller. Grandchildren, Charles, Willard, Lansing.

Joost — Joseph Dietz, Fifer, served on detail under Captain Miller.

Johannes — John Dominick, Jr.,

mustered as drummer. Son of Lieutenant John Dominick. Served as captain in the war of 1812. Grandchild, Weidman Dominick of Gallupville, N. Y. Great-grandson, A. L. Fisher, served in the Union Army.

Mathias — Mattice Ball,

a brother to Peter and son of "Chairman" Ball. He was sent to carry powder to the Middle Fort, and arrived just in time—Johnson's invasion. Died about 1840, leaving no descendants.

George Becker,

brother to the major, resided in the present town of Wright.

Jacob Becker,

brother to the major, served in the sortie against McDonald and was present when the Indian, David Ogeyonda, was killed in his attempt to escape. He served also in the defense of the Lower Fort during Johnson's invasion, was stationed in the tower as sharpshooter, and accompanied the troops under Colonel Vroman on the following day. He died 1845. Grandsons, Austin, Paul W.

Johannis — John Becker,

brother to the major, was surprised and killed by tomahawk, by Chrysler's Indians, while clearing a secluded place in the wood for a "wheat stack," July 26, 1782.—SIMMS. Grandchildren, Abram, Maria Philips, Lida Cottrell. Great-grandchildren, Peter W., Charles W., Clinton D., Athea Sands.

Wilhelmus — William Becker,

the major's brother. Died July 27, 1838, aged 77, leaving no descendants.

Abram Berg

served only with this company. At the time of Johnson's invasion he was assisting to drive cattle to the Lower Fort. His party secreted themselves and the cattle, and escaped. Died April 21, 1835, aged 77.

Philip Berg

detailed for service at different times under Captains Brown and Miller. Died January 31, 1839, aged 77. Grandchildren, Seneca, William, Peter, James, Charles. Great-grandson, Jeff.

Wilhelmus — William Berg.

Barney Cartagan — Cardocan.

Peter Dietz.

A Peter Dietz, second lieutenant in Third Albany County Regiment of February 20, 1776, and "Peter Dietz, captain in Colonel Wemple's Albany County Regiment, wounded by accident and died next day," is the only "Captain Dietz" given in the State roster. Simms mentions a Captain Dietz who was captured and died in Canada. I think the above the one referred to by him, but was not a captain, while the one referred to in the roster was a resident of Albany county.

William Cortney

served under Captains Brown and Miller also.

Soyer Denny,

detailed at one time under Captain Miller.

Jacob Dietz.

In the roster I find "Jacob Dietz, Lieutenant," but his appointment is not dated. Simms says: Early in the spring of 1782 William Dietz was captured; his wife and children with his father and mother were murdered. That owing to grief and harsh treatment, he died in captivity." By comparison I infer that it should be Jacob instead of William.

William Dietz, Jr.,

blacksmith, served under Captains Brown and Miller on detached duty. Died February 16, 1794, aged 45. Great-grandchildren, William, Mrs. Merrill, Mrs. Mann, Mrs. Boughton.

Cornelius Eckerson

served on detail under Captains Brown and Miller. Died at Seward in 1839. Grandson, Henry. Another grandson, William, Jr., served in the Union Army and was killed at Cold Harbor, Va.

Thomas Eckerson.

In the archives I find Thomas and Thomas, Jr. Major Thomas was the son of the original settler Thomas; and if tradition be true that he had no sons, then "Thomas, Jr., private," is an error. As the original Thomas was too old for enrollment, the Thomas here given was the son of John and a nephew of the major. Grandchildren, William, Abraham, Daniel, John. Three great-grandchildren, Jacob, Ezra and Philip, served in the Union Army.

Peter Enders — Entis

did detached duty under Captains Brown and Miller. His home was burned during Johnson's invasion.

Peter Enders, Jr.,

detached from his company to serve under Captains Brown and Miller. Grandchildren, Elizabeth, Christina, and Mrs. John Warner.

John Enders, Jr.,

died March 12, 1825. Grandson, William Shout.

William Finck

detailed for service under Captains Richtmyer and Miller.

Christoffel — Christopher Hilts, Jr.,

served on detail under Captains Richtmyer and Miller.

George Hilts.

Grandson, George; great-grandsons, Martin, David, George.

John Hutt

served under Major Becker, and at the time of the attack on the major's house, narrowly escaped death or capture. He bravely assisted in the defense of the major and his family.—SIMMS. He was the only member of his family living in the country—having driven his Tory brother from the country.

Jacob Hillsinger

resided in the northern part of the county. He was accounted a good "ranger" and fighter. His gun was the old "Holland rifle" and was brought from that country. He served principally as scout in "Old Turlach" or Seward and Sharon. Tradition says that he was one of the party who followed Chrysler at one time as far as "the river" and when Chrysler made insulting gestures from the opposite bank, he begged leave of his captain to shoot, and he did shoot, and "made Chrysler tumble." He died leaving no descendants.

John Hillsinger

served principally on detached service in Captain Miller's company and also under Colonel Duboise, Colonel Willett and in Captain Becker's company at Batavia. Grandchildren, Hiram, Isaac, Henry, Margaret Hoyt.

Peter Hillsinger

served also under Captains Brown, Richtmyer and Miller. Grandsons, Luther and Peter. Great-grandson, William.

John Ingold

served under Captain Brown at the "Lower Fort." Died December 3, 1809, aged 74. Great-grandchildren, Shafer Swart, M. Jennie Snook.

John Ingold, Jr.,

died August 19, 1846.

Peter Kidney.John Kniskern,

brother to Jacob, served under Hager also. Was stationed in the tower of the Lower Fort when Johnson passed through the valley. Died February 11, 1782.

William Kniskern, Lieutenant, brother to Jacob, served as sergeant in Brown's company and as second lieutenant in Miller's company. Was captured with Lieutenant Borst. Grandchildren, William, Nicholas, Calvin, Maria, Rachel, Eve Herron. Great-grandson, George, served in the Union Army.

Teunis Kniskern

died August, 1834, aged 83.

Jacob Granatier — Kranatier

detailed for service under Captains Brown and Miller.

Lambert Lawyer

served on detachments under Brown, Miller and Richtmyer. Died August 12, 1829, aged 62. Grandchildren, Jacob, Nancy France, Almira Calkins, Catharine Marelay, Nancy Johnson.

John Low

served under Captain Miller also. Died April, 1821.

Peter Mann, Jr.,

did some service under Miller also.

Jacob Mann

did detached service under Brown and Miller. Died March 15, 1829, aged 79. Grandchildren, Hon. John E. Mann, Milwaukee, Wis.; Abram Mann, Cobleskill, N. Y.; Eliza Larkins, Sloansville, N. Y.

George Mereness.Henry Merkel

served under Captain Miller. Grandson, William M. Great-grandson, John L. Last in line.

Jacob Merkel

served under Miller also, and as scout and ranger.

Jacob Money.Daniel Price.*George Rheinhart, detached for service under Miller.

William Rheinhart

served under Miller and Becker also.

John Resue.

Great-grandson, Leonard, served in the Union Army.

Benjamin River.Caspar Rorick.

Great-grandsons, Riley S. and Ezra Gardner, served in the Union Army.

Barner Rorick.Henrick — Henry Salge.*Adem — Adam Shafer — Scheffer, served also as scout and rifleman under Captain Brown. Grandson, Henry A. Great-grandchildren, Gideon, George A., Ada, Mrs. A. W. Harder.

Teunis Shafer

served under Brown also.

Hendricus — Henry Shafer, served at different times under Brown, Richtmyer, Miller and Becker. He was one of the gunners who worked the field piece at the time Johnson passed through. Died August 27, 1832, aged 74. Grandchildren, Martin L., Gideon, Jacob H., Catharine Swart, Mary Sternberg.

John F. Shafer

served on detachment under Richtmyer.

Marcus Shafer

served under Captain Miller.

Marcus Shafer, Jr.,

served under Captains Brown and Miller. Died February 23, 1835, aged 72. Grandson, Marcus Shafer, Schoharie, N. Y. Last in line.

Jacobus — Jacob Schoolcraft — Schulecraft served under Brown, Richtmyer and Miller. Died August 12, 1834, aged 72. Grandson, Hiram. Great-grandchild, Mary Wifenbeck.

Lorrens — Lawrence Schoolcraft 2d served the greater part of his duty as sentinel at the Lower Fort. Did detached duty under Brown and Miller. Grandsons, William and Seneca Sands.

Peter Schoolcraft

served under Captain Brown and at another time under Miller. Grandsons, Ira and Ezra.

John Schoolcraft,

a brother to Jacob and Lawrence, is not enrolled in the archives, although he became subject in 1781, or two years before the close of the war. Died June 18, 1849, aged 84. Grandsons, Peter P. and Jacob F. Great-grandson, Sherman.

John Schuyler

served under Captains Brown and Miller.

John F. Schell.George Schell

accompanied Major Becker from the Lower Fort, on the sortie against McDonald. He also assisted in the defense of the major and his family during the assault by Chrysler and his Indians in 1782. He kept the score and pronounced the epitaph of each Indian hit, and consigned each defunct savage to his future abode, after the Calvinistic creed.

Jacob F. Schell

served at different times under Captains Brown and Miller. Grandchildren, Daniel, Abraham, Sophia Fisher. Great-grandson, A. L. Fisher, served in the Union Army.

Henry Relyea.Henry Sidney — Sidnig, Sitnich.*Joost — Joseph Sidney.*Peter Sidney

served also under Brown and Miller. Great-grandchildren, John J., Mary K. Wood, Gertie Davis.

William Sidney

served under Captains Brown, Miller and Richtmyer.

John Snyder — Schneider,

served under Brown also.

John Snyder,

or "Schoharie John," was taken prisoner July 26, 1782. On reaching Canada he enlisted in the British Army, to secure an opportunity to escape.

Lutwick — Lodwig Snyder,

father of "Schoharie John," served in detachments under Hager and Miller. Great-grandsons, Jacob M., and Jacob L. Driesbach. Great-great-grandson, Philip Snyder.

Abram Sternberg

served under Miller also. Died May 24, 1818, aged 80 years.

Jacob Sternberg

served on detached duty under Brown.

Barent Stubrach,

a brother to the captain, did other service under Brown, Miller and Richtmyer. He served a greater part of the time during the war as scout and rifleman. At near the close he was found sitting against a tree in the woods, dead, with his rifle between his knees. It is supposed his death was caused by over-exertion while scouting. He left no descendants.

Joseph Van Valkenberg

did special duty as a scout.

Jacob Van Dyke

served under Captain Brown and under Colonel Willett as scout and rifleman. At the time of Johnson's invasion he was sent out from the Lower Fort to reconnoiter, and on returning was stationed in the tower as sharpshooter. He was one of the party who pursued Johnson to the Mohawk, and accompanied the cavalry from the Lower Fort against McDonald early in the war. Died October 3, 1844, aged 84. Descendants, children of Joseph Van Dyke.

Ephraim Vroman.

The roster gives the name as "private" of his company. There is no further evidence that there were two Ephraim Vromans.

Peter C. Vroman, or Cornelius, son of Peter (?), sometimes called "Hazel Pete." Tradition says he tried to kill "Seths Henry" after the war.

Henry Webber, Jr.Henry Worth—Werth,

did service under Captain Brown also. Died in 1812. Grandchildren, Mary, Harvey, Heman, Libbie, Martha Courter.

John Worth

served under Miller and Brown.

William Young

did service under Brown and Miller also.

Adam Zimmer

did service under Miller also. On the morning of the assault on Major Becker's house, being unable to reach it before the Indians arrived, he started for the Lower Fort. He was fired on by an Indian, but as he stooped at the instant to pass between the upper and lower bars of a passage, he escaped the bullet, which passed through the bar directly above his head. His wife was with the major's family at the time. Died June 26, 1832, aged 82. Great-grandsons, David, Hamilton, Sylvester, Freeman, Philip, Charles, Edward.

George Zimmer

did service under Becker. Granddaughter, Flora Weidman.

William Zimmer

served on detachment under Captain Hager. Great-grandsons, David S., Joseph.

Jacob Zimmer, Jr.,

did service under Captains Brown, Miller and Richtmyer. Was massacred by Chrysler's Indians, July 26, 1782.

Peter Fink

did service under Captains Richtmyer and Miller.

George Aker.

Descendants not clearly determined.

SECOND COMPANY, FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK MILITIA.Jacob Hager, Captain,

“served as lieutenant, on the side of the Crown, in the war between England and France.” At the beginning of the war of the Revolution he was commissioned captain under Colonel Vroman with rank from October 20, 1775, and continued in command of this company until the close of the war. Previous to the invasion of McDonald he accompanied Henry Becker to Albany to ask for reinforcements. In 1779 he commanded an expedition against Brandt, but failed to meet him. He commanded a company, made up of his own and detachments from the First and Third Companies; sent on several occasions to reinforce the army on the frontier and along the Mohawk. During the invasion of August 9, 1780, his buildings, near what is now Breakabeen, were burned. After the invasion of Vroman’s land by Brandt and Chrysler in 1781, he was sent in pursuit with his company and a company under “Captain Hale.”*

The enemy were overtaken near Jefferson Lake, and owing to the cowardice of Hale, he succeeded in escaping after inflicting some loss on the Patriots. Captain Hager’s record during the Revolution proves that he was a prominent Patriot. Died August 21, 1819, aged 85. Grandchildren, DeWitt, Cornelia Ferguson. Great-grandson, M. V. B. Hager. Great-great-granddaughter, Kate.

Martinus — Martin Van Slyke, Lieutenant.

Commissioned first Lieutenant October 20, 1775. Succeeded by Ephraim Vroman, February 20, 1778. Was appointed second lieutenant of Associate Exempts, November 4, 1778. Married the widow of Bartholomew C. Vroman, daughter of Samuel Vroman, and afterward known as “Granny Van Slyke”.

NOTE.—The Captain Miller frequently referred to, commanded a company in the Duaneburg District.

* History speaks of Captain Hale as a, “Continental” officer. There is but one Captain Hale — Aaron — down in the roster of the State, and at the time above mentioned he had been serving as captain of a company of Militia in the Ninth Regiment, Second Claverack Battalion, since March 29, previous.

Ephraim Vroman, Lieutenant, commissioned first lieutenant October 20, 1778; taken prisoner August 9, 1780; released August 31, 1781, M. R. Author Simms says: "He was captured by a party of seventy-three Indians and five Tories, together with his two sons, Josias E. and Bartholomew E., and an infant which was released the day following but died soon after. His wife was shot, tomahawked and scalped, and his little daughter, Christina, killed with a stone by the Tory Beacroft. Vroman was taken to Niagara, to Montreal, and to 'South Rakela,' where he remained until exchanged. His two sons evidently returned, as a descendant informs me that the lieutenant married a 'widow Dietz' and that the two sons married her two daughters." Query, May not the "widow Dietz" have been the wife of Peter Dietz who died a prisoner? Descendants of Ephraim Vroman: Josias H., a grandson. Great-grandchildren, J. Schuyler, Josiah, John, Maria Snow.

Johannis W. Bouck, Lieutenant, appointed second lieutenant October 20, 1775. Succeeded by Cornelius Feek, February 20, 1778. Served afterward under Captain Stubrach. Died February 26, 1785.

Cornelius Feek, Second Lieutenant, promoted from sergeant to second lieutenant February 20, 1778. Served on detachment under Captain Richtmyer.

John L. Lawyer, Ensign, appointed October 20, 1775. Succeeded February 20, 1778; and appointed lieutenant in the Associate Exempts. Died January 25, 1842, aged 94. Great-grandchildren, William H., Thomas, John S., Mary L. Clark.

Peter Swart, Ensign, appointed February 20, 1778. Had been enrolled as private and promoted to corporal and to sergeant; served as messenger on several important occasions. Died November 3, 1829, aged 77.

John Hager, Sergeant, gave warning of attack on the Upper Fort and the capture of its inhabitants August 9, 1780. Died August 24, 1829, aged 84. Grandchildren, Tenuis, Eliza Bouck. Great-grandchildren, Mary E. Van Alstyne, Catharine S. Marcotte.

Joseph Hager, Sergeant, served as private under Captain Becker. Participated in the engagement at Jefferson Lake and was severely wounded by gunshot in the right shoulder. After the war he removed to a distant part of the State, and his further record is not known, except that he and his immediate descendants became prominent in civil and political affairs.

Christian Bouck, Sergeant.

According to a history there could be but one Christian Bouck subject to enrollment during the Revolution — the father of William C. and the first occupant of Boucks Island. His survivors have no traditions of his military service, and are unable to remove the impression that there were two Christian Boucks, as the above enrollment and the date of death of another Christian Bouck apparently shows; and further, if the Christian, father of William C., took part in this war, and held the position of sergeant, it seems that his grandchildren would have received some tradition. I have Christian Bouck died April 13, 1786; Christian Bouck, father of William C., died 1836.

John Keyser, Sergeant.Richard Shelmandine, Sergeant, promoted to corporal and to sergeant; served under Captain Becker also.

Christian Shafer, Corporal, served on regular duty as sentry at the Upper Fort. Died December 24, 1819, age 58. Children living, Lany Shafer, Margaret Mattice. Grandson, John H. Mattice.

Peter Kniskern

became liable for duty 1780. Died December 26, 1827, age 63.

Baltus Krisler

served on detached duty under Captain Becker. If this man belonged to the noted Tory family I regard his enrollment and service in two different companies as evidence of patriotism.

Abram Keyser, Corporal, became prominent after the war, and with his brother John removed from the county. Grandson, Peter.

John Kriesler.

Nicholas Long.

Abram Mattice.

Conrad Mattice.

Grandson, Jacob H. Great-grandson, Garrett W. Another great-grandson, Paul, served in the Union Army.

Elias Mattice.

Frederick Mattice, Jr.

Daughter, Katy Burget. Grandchildren, Asa, Frederick, Lawrence, Alston, Mrs. Hiram Ives.

George Mattice

died 1818, aged 52. Grandsons, John, Freeman.

Henry Mattice, Jr.

John Mattice

served under Captains Richtmyer and Becker. Great-grandson, John H.

John Mattice, Jr.

Grandson, George B. Bonck. Great-grandsons, George C., Willard, Stephen, Jr.

Nicholas F. Mattice.

Nicholas Mattice, Jr.,

died October 13, 1830, age 69. Did sentinel and messenger service. Grandchildren, Dorothy, Alexander, David, Catharine, Elizabeth Dnesler. Great-granddaughter, Emma Scutt.

George Snyder

served as private under Captains Stubrach and Richtmyer and as corporal under Captain Becker.

Henry Snyder.

Jacob Snyder.

Lorrens — Lawrence Swart

did service under Captains Richtmyer and Stubrach.

Peter Swart

was one of the party sent as spies over service in the Charlotte Valley; was betrayed by Abram Becker, captured, taken to Detroit and after release adopted the Indian life and customs and did not return.

Joachim Valkenberg, reputed a good soldier; served in the fields and at the fort during Johnson's raid; was killed at Jefferson Lake. His gun was taken by the Indian who shot him, and who admitted the fact after the war and surrendered the gun. This Indian died alone in the woods and suddenly.

Jacob Valkenberg.John Valkenberg.

NOTE.—Careful comparison of the names of the roster and of family traditions justifies the inference that the original name of the family in Schoharie was Valk and that different branches adopted the names of Valck—Valkenberg—Van Valkenburg and in some cases Folluck. At the time of the Revolution the name of Van Valkenberg was found in other regiments, but not in this county.

George Shafer

served also in the war of 1812 as a substitute for Cornelius Vroman. Died March 4, 1828, aged 73. Grandchildren, John, George W., Wellington, Richard, Adelia Borst. Great-grandsons, Frederick, and Edwin who served in the Union Army.

Jacob Van Loan.Harmanus Vosburg.*Adam A. Vroman

escaped to the Upper Fort at the time of the massacre in Vroman's Land. When asked how he got away, he replied: "I pulled foot." He was referred to as "Pull Foot" Vroman ever afterward.

John Vroman

served as courier and did service under Captain Stubrach. Was captured August 9, 1780. Released 1782. Grandchild, Katy Burget. Great-grandchild, Mrs. Hiram Ives.

Isaac Vroman.

Early on the morning of November 10th, 1781, he called at the house of his son "to have some work done" and was "shot in the dooryard" by a party of the enemy who had lain in ambush during the night for the purpose. "He was clubbed and scalped by Seths Henry." During Johnson's invasion the year previous he was at the Upper Fort.

Isaac Vroman, Jr.

Bartholemew Vroman, Jr.,

captured August 9, 1780. Released on parole 1782.

Peter A. Vroman

served under Captain Richtmyer also. Died January 3, 1794, aged 51. Grandson, Peter A. V. Bartholemew. Great-grandsons, Charles Bartholemew served in the Union Army, William Swart.

Peter I. Vroman,

son of Isaac, and who escaped to the fort after the murder of his father. Died at the age of 43. Grandchildren, Ann Eve Borst, Elizabeth Lawyer.

Samuel Vroman

was a merchant and committee-man, and enrolled for service. He died soon after the war. He was the father of Susannah, who became Susannah Van Slyke by a second marriage. Great-grandchildren, David J., Margaret Bellinger. Great-great-grandson, William.

Simon Vroman

was captured with his wife, August 9, 1780. Was wounded, and died soon after reaching Canada. His wife married in that country and did not return.

Bartholomew C. Vroman

served on detail under Captain Richtmyer. He was one of the party who discovered the captors of William Bonck and servants. He accompanied Murphey on several expeditions and was "best man" at Murphey's wedding. When Johnson approached the Middle Fort he was in the line of skirmishers and wore the handkerchief of his betrothed, Susannah, for a head covering. He married soon after.

William Barnhart.Henry Bauch

did service under Captain Becker.

Johannis Bauch.William Bauch, Jr.,

did other service under Captain Richtmyer. He with his son Lawrence was captured in July, 1780, by a party of Indians under Seths Henry, who were overtaken by Harper's men on the following day and compelled to abandon their prisoners. Great-grandchild, Eve Keyser.

Lawrence Bauch,

son of William, Jr., was sent from the Upper Fort to give information at the time of Johnson's invasion. Was captured with his father in July, 1780, but escaped during the night before his father was retaken. "Father, I'm going to eat pudding and milk out of my own bowl to-morrow morning." Grandchildren, William, Eve Keyser.

Adam Becker.Conradt Becker.*Nicholas Bauch

died November 14, 1806, aged 57. Grandson, Thomas I.

Nicholas W. Bauch.Frederick Becker.*Peter Brewer

did service under Captain Stubrach also. Those supposed to be of his generation are found buried near Breakabeen; but any living descendants I have been unable to find.

Adam Brown, Jr.John Brown.*Joseph Brown

captured July 4, 1782.

Michael Brown

served under Captain Brown also.

Hugh Caghy.

Nathan Daley.

Lewis Dannea or Dana.

Julius Eagars.

Nicholas Feek

did service under Captain Stubrach.

Peter Feek

discovered the rear of Johnson's forces as they were passing below the Upper Fort. He was a brother of John Feek, the father-in-law of Murphey. His son Nicholas served in the war of 1812. Grandchildren, Margaret J. Houck, Catharine E. Mann.

Nicholas Gerlach.

Samuel Haggadorn.

Adam Hager.

Henry Hager,

son of the captain, afterward became "Judge Hager."

Samuel Hager.

William Henry.

Adam Haggadorn.

Henry Holdaway.

Benj. Humphrey.

James Humphrey.

Isaac Patchen

was captured with his brother at Harpersfield, April 7, 1780; released November 28, 1782. At the time of capture he was on detailed service under Captain Harper "with eleven others," to make sugar for the garrisons in the valley. He became the father of eight children. Died February 22, 1834, aged 70. Grandchildren, Benjamin, Ezra, Adaline Peters, Sarah Dayton, Jemima Beardsley, Hannah Peters, Loanda Foot, Adaline Russ, Nancy Rhodes, Ruthalia Case, Margaret S. Krum, Rhoda Achinson, Sarah Crane, Joseph Fuller, Maria Treadwell, Eliza A. Mitchell.

Freegift Patchen

was not enrolled as of military age, but mustered as fifer, as was the custom to appoint enterprising lads as musicians. He was captured with the party sent to Harpersfield to make sugar, and treated with marked cruelty at the several Indian villages and while confined in various Canadian prisons. According to a narrative left by him, his life was spared by a humane surgeon, who discovered his wretched condition and ordered the removal of his irons and better treatment. He was released November 28, 1782. Died August 30, 1831, aged 72. Grandsons, Freegift, M. V. B. Hager, Morris Hager. Great grandson, Harley Patchen.

Diewalt Bartholemew

was enrolled under both Colonels Harper and Vroman, and did regular service under Captain Hager during the last years of the war.

Christopher Hilts,

father of Christopher, Jr., and George.

THIRD COMPANY, FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK STATE MILITIA.

George Richtmyer, Captain,

resided east of the Middle Fort, joined in the attack on McDonald's forces at Chrysler's Mill, served in the defense of the Middle Fort during Johnson's raid and served the Patriot cause on the frontier. He was commissioned captain, October 20, 1775, reappointed February 20, 1778, and held the position throughout the war. Died September 16, 1803, aged 65. Great-grandchildren, George, Philip, Almon.

Johannes I. Lawyer, First Lieutenant, appointed October 20, 1775; reappointed February 20, 1778. Died July 21, 1818. Grandchildren, J. Addison, Mary Upham. Great-grandchildren, William, Abram, Mrs. George Clark. Another great-grandson, George S., was mortally wounded in the Civil war.

Martinus W. Zielie, Second Lieutenant, appointed October 20, 1775; reappointed February 20, 1778.

Went out with the skirmishers to oppose the progress of Johnson and did effective service during the siege of the Middle Fort. Died November 3, 1833, aged 88.

Johannis L. Bellinger, Ensign, appointed October 20, 1775; reappointed February 20, 1778. The roster rates him as ensign under Captain Hager.

Albertus Becker, Sergeant.

Cornelius Bauch, Sergeant, promoted from private to corporal and to sergeant. Died September 7, 1824, aged 65. Grandsons, George A., Peter, Henry. Great-grandson, John B.

Christian Richtmyer, Sergeant, a brother to the captain, served on detached duty under Captain Miller.

Joseph Mattice, Sergeant, served on detached duty under Captain Hager.

John Rickert, Sergeant, promoted to sergeant; served under Captains Hager, Brown, Stubrach and Miller. He secured the goose and moccasins which Enders intended to have. Great-grandchildren, George, Mrs. Shafer Swart.

John B. Becker, Corporal.

Bartholemew Vroman, Corporal,

did detached duty under Captain Hager and served as sergeant under Captain Becker.

Marcus Bellinger, Corporal.

Granddaughter, Nancy Manchester. Great-grandsons, Marcus, Henry.

John G. Becker, Fifer.

Marcus Rickert, Fifer.

His music must have been inspiring, as we find him detailed at different times under Captains Stubrach, Brown and Miller.

Joseph I. Borst, Drummer, was sent as messenger to Albany at the time of Johnson's raid. His father dying previous to the war, and he being the eldest son, was the only one of the family enrolled for duty. He died June 14, 1834, aged 73. Grandchildren, Augustus, William, John, Louisa B. Hyde.

Thomas Bouck

served under Miller also.

Albertus Becker, Jr.David Becker

joined the forces against McDonald. Died March 15, 1796, aged 38. Grandchildren, Richard, John, Thomas, Louisa B. Hyde. Great-grandson, Edward. Last in line; served in the Union Army.

Garret Becker.

We may infer that this man was an enterprising soldier, for Author Simms tells us that he loaned the wagon which carried Murphey's wedding party to Schenectady. I learn nothing more of the soldier or his wagon.

Harmanus Becker.Henry Becker, sent to Albany as messenger at the time of McDonald's invasion. Died 1830. Grandson, William G. Great-grandson, George H.

John S. Becker.John F. Becker.*John H. Becker.*John J. Becker.*John Albertus Becker.*John P. Becker.*John William Becker.

There were nine John Beckers, whose names were classed separate by the addition of a different letter of the alphabet. The roster of this company and tradition bear evidence to the fact that there were "nine Hans Baeckers."

Storm S. Becker.

Marcus Bellinger, Jr.

Jacob Borst.

Johannes Borst

did other service under Brown and Miller.

Peter Borst.

Grandchildren, Milton, Eve Ann. Great-grandson, George S. Bouck.

Nicholas Zeh

served under Captain Brown also.

FOURTH COMPANY, FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK MILITIA.

Christian Brown, Captain.

The date of first appointment not given, but find him holding the position, February 20, 1778. He was second in command at the battle of Cobleskill, now Warnerville. After the death of Patrick he ordered the remnant of the Patriot forces to escape as best they could. His mills were spared the general destruction through the intervention of a Tory neighbor, who hoped to gain possession through confiscation, if the Patriots were subdued.

Hendrick — Henry Borst, First Lieutenant.

His appointment approved February 20, 1778. Died May 1, 1808. Great-grandsons, Joseph, Harvey, Henry.

Jacob Borst, Lieutenant, appointed February 20, 1778, took part in the battle of Cobleskill and escaped unhurt. In the latter part of October, 1781, in company with two soldiers from Fort Duboise, he went to "Turlach" to assist a farmer named Myndert in securing his peas and hogs. After finishing their work, and while drying their clothing within the house, the whole party were surprised and captured by a Tory and six Indians.—SIMMS. Lieutenant Borst and Sergeant William Kniskern suffered great hardships while on their way to Canada through cold, hunger and "running the gauntlet" at the Indian villages. Through such severe treatment the lieutenant contracted consumption and died soon after reaching Niagara, in winter of 1781 and 1782.

Johannes H. Shafer, Ensign, appointed February 20, 1778; succeeded October 30, 1778; was engaged at the battle of Cobleskill and escaped unhurt. His family fled to the woods. Died May 6, 1833, aged 82. Grandchildren, George, Peter, Catharine M. Lawyer. Great-grandchild, Mary C. Brown.

Nicholas Warner, Ensign, was the father of nine children, the youngest of whom died at the Lower Fort during the war. Appointed ensign October 30, 1778. He was engaged in the battle of Cobleskill, and after that event served as scout and courier. At the time of Johnson's raid he was of the party stationed in the tower of the Lower Fort as sharpshooter. On the 9th of December, 1782, he was captured with his father while at his home to procure a sleigh which he had sold to Joost Berner. His captors encamped for the night near Richmondville. To allay suspicion he removed the moccasins and leggings which an Indian had given him in exchange for his brogans, and lay down for the night and was secured in the usual fashion. He had determined to escape if possible, and knowing that the Indians were familiar with much of the German language, he improvised a song

—no doubt with variations — and informed his father through that medium of his intentions. After his captors fell asleep he escaped by taking a circuitous route, and during a heavy snow-storm he reached Fort Duboise at daybreak and “in his stockined feet.” Died July 27, 1838, aged 91. Great-grandsons, Lieutenant George W. Snyder, U. S. A., George H. Warner, served in the Union Army.

William Mann, Sergeant, served at times under Captains Stubrach, Richtmyer and Miller. Died October 19, 1816, aged 70. No descendants.

Henry Shafer, Sergeant, was wounded by gunshot in the thigh while on retreat from the battle of Cobleskill and became disabled from further military duty. He avoided capture and was found by friends and taken to the Lower Fort, where he recovered. At a time previous to the battle of Cobleskill and while scouting he was pursued and fired at by an Indian. After escape he found the spent musket ball of the Indian between the back and lining of his vest. In after years he became judge of the county. Died April 15, 1839, aged 82. Grandchildren, William, Henry, Diana, Catharine, Peter P., now dead, served in the Union Army. Great-grandchildren, Clarence, Paul, served in the Union Army, and Mrs. Alexander Campbell.

John Valentine, Sergeant.

Garret Nicholas, Sergeant.

Lambert Sternberg, Corporal, served on detachments under Captains Stubrach, Richtmyer and Miller. Died July 1, 1829, aged 72. Grandson, John.

Leonard King — Koenig, Corporal, did service under Stubrach. Was wounded at the battle of Cobleskill. Great-grandson Lawrence in the Union Army.

Peter Shafer, Corporal, did service at one time under Captain Miller. Was wounded at the battle of Cobleskill. Died March 31, 1834, aged 76. Grandchildren, James, Caroline Bellinger. Great-grandson, George W. Bellinger.

Jacob Bauch.

No descendants within the county.

Peter Bauch.

Great-grandchildren, J. W. Russel, Kate Russel, Martha M. Sternberg, Fanny E. Lawyer.

Baltus Bauch.Joost — Joseph Berner

died May 17, 1833, aged 78.

John Bouck

served under Captain Miller. Died December 31, 1830, aged 82.

Migel — Michael Borst.Joost — Joseph Borst

was one of the Committee of Safety. Died January, 1812. Grandson, Jeremiah. Great-grandson, Abram.

William Brown,

son of the captain.

Adam Berg.John Eckerson.

Granddaughter, Lavancha Hallenbeck. Great-grandson, Uriah Hallenbeck, died in Union Army.

George Ferster,

father of John and Martinus, was taken prisoner at the time of the second invasion of Cobleskill. After his release he returned to Pennsylvania, from whence he came before settling in the Cobleskill Valley.

John Ferster

had served as courier and scout, and had returned from Cherry Valley on the day previous to the battle of Cobleskill. He was killed in that engagement, but his body was not found until a field of wheat on which he fell was harvested.

Martinus Ferster,

brother to John. He was also in the battle of Cobleskill. On the retreat he took refuge in the house of George Warner, Sr., in which he perished, after being set on fire by the enemy. His body was identified by means of his tobacco box.

John Freemyer — Frimier

took part in the battle of Cobleskill. He took refuge in the Warner house with young Ferster and was burned alive. His knee buckles and gun barrel revealed the identity of his remains.

John Freemyer, Jr.,

was captured September 2, 1780, and remained a prisoner one year. Died April 19, 1835. Grandsons, Abraham, John, George. Great-granddaughter, Mrs. Hiram Bender. Great-great-grandson, Frederick H.

George Freemyer

was engaged in the battle of Cobleskill. Was captured with his brother John, September 2, 1780.

Jacob Freemyer

did other service under Stubrach. Died June 18, 1834, aged 77. Grandchildren, Kasson, Martha Truax.

Jacob Shafer

was wounded at the battle of Cobleskill and conveyed to the rear during the retreat. He was left "behind a log" by a comrade, but was discovered by the enemy and killed.

Joseph Shafer

did service under Richtmyer. Grandchildren, John F., Maria Dart. Great-grandson Edwin served in the Union Army.

Lambert Shafer

did service under Miller.

John Shafer, Jr.Simeon Schuyler

served on detachments under Miller and Stubrach.

John V. Singer.

William Snyder

did service under Captain Hager also. Died April 19, 1801, aged 51. Grandchildren, Catherine Brown, Lovina Howe. Great-grandson, William.

Teunis Swart.Jost — Joseph Warner

did service under Miller, and served as substitute for his brother, Christopher, "at Rhinebeck and at Stillwater." Grandson, Daniel. Great-grandchild, Liza.

George Warner, Jr.

Enrolled at the age of 18. Was engaged in the battle of Cobleskill. At the time of McDonald's invasion, he was detailed as a spy to watch the movements of the Tories in the vicinity of the Lower Fort. He was captured July 27, 1782, near Cobleskill, by Chrysler and Seths Henry. On his journey to Canada he was threatened with punishment by hanging for protesting against the tightness of the cords with which his hands were bound. At an Indian village he was flogged by Mollie Brandt, one of Sir William Johnson's former sweetheart squaws. At an Indian castle he was compelled to "run the gauntlet," and when near the goal was knocked down by a blow on the head from a club in the hands of a large Indian boy. At Niagara his imprisonment was very severe. Later, he with a companion prisoner from Virginia, named Price, was placed to service near by, and during their term many mysterious deaths and disappearances occurred among the Indians of that vicinity. He remained a prisoner until after the close of the war, then ran away with several others, and reached home July 15, 1784. He afterward became captain of Militia. Two sons, Marcus and John, served in the war of 1812. Died March 28, 1844, aged 86. Grandchildren, Tobias, Isaac Mann, Mrs. Jas. Harroway.

John Zeh

resided in what is now Richmondville, and was one of the farthest western residents of the valley. He was killed at the battle of Cobleskill, and tradition says by a Tory brother who had joined the enemy just previous, that he might inherit the property of their father.

FIFTH COMPANY, FIFTEENTH REGIMENT, NEW YORK MILITIA, AT BATAVIA.

Storm Becker, Captain.

In Colonel Willett's regiment of levies for the defense of the frontiers, and in the roster of officers we find under date of July 24, 1782, "Storm Becker of Schoharie, Ensign." On or after that date it appears that several ensigns were detailed to recruit, but Becker's name does not appear among the number. In the roster of the Fifteenth Regiment, and under date of February 20, 1778, we find "Storm Becker captain of a company in and about Batavia." As the foregoing is the only data given, we can only infer that owing to expiration of term, or to the small number of men in the company, it was disbanded, and Captain Becker accepted the position of ensign in Colonel Willett's regiment, where we find him July 24, 1778. Grandsons, Philip B., John, David. Great-grandsons, Stilliman, George, Charles.

Peter Hager, First Lieutenant, appointed February 20, 1778.

Peter Richtmyer, Second Lieutenant,

FOREIGN SERVICE.

Archibald Lemmon

resided in the town of Fulton, and at the age of 17 enlisted with his brother John in Captain Muller's company, Colonel Graham's regiment. Died November 28, 1842, aged 79.

John Lemmon

joined Captain Muller's company of the Third Regiment of Levies

under Colonel Graham in 1780. According to tradition he was taken prisoner during his service, and to escape torture and death, adopted the Indian mode of life and marrying according to custom. He remained a prisoner for eight years and escaped, returning to his native county. Date of death unknown. No descendants this side the St. Lawrence.

ASSOCIATE EXEMPTS.

According to Author Simins this organization was composed of men who were upwards of fifty years of age. We find some under fifty years who had been enrolled elsewhere. Evidently the members of the organization were only required for duty in garrison or at times of invasion. The roster of this organization is incomplete and it is impossible to give a full list of members.

Teunis Vroman, Captain, appointed November 4, 1778. Had served previously in the French war. Held command of the Upper Fort on the day of the massacre of August 9, 1780, but had left the fort to attend farm labor. He was surprised and massacred together with his wife and son, Peter — the lad whom the notorious Beacraft so barbarously murdered.

Peter Snyder, First Lieutenant, appointed November 4, 1778 ; promoted to captain after the death of Captain Vroman. Died May 29, 1803, aged 60.

Martinus Vroman, Second Lieutenant, appointed November 4, 1778.

Jacob Lawyer, Jr., Ensign.

Henry Hager

had served as captain under the Crown during the French war in America. His sympathies were with the Colonies, and with his sons he espoused the Patriot cause. He was captured by Brandt in August, 1782, and remained a prisoner eleven months. His sons, Jacob, John, Joseph and Peter, were prominent in service. The relationship of the other Hagers, except Henry, is not determined. His epitaph reads: Anno 1796, July 13th. Died Hendrich Heger Aetas 93, 11 mont.

John Feek

resided within the stockade of the Upper Fort. Father-in-law to Timothy Murphey.

“committee man.” Others belonging to this organization were enrolled in the Militia proper and were accounted for in both grades of service.

RANGERS AND MINUTE MEN.

A resolution of the Provincial Congress, passed July 17, 1777, authorized the raising of two companies of Rangers from the counties of Albany, Tryon and Ulster. A resolution of same date made John Harper captain and Alexander Harper first lieutenant. From the archives it appears that these companies ranked as Continental troops and drew pay as such, and that the appointment of John Harper as captain was no reduction of grade or rank from colonel of Militia, an appointment which he apparently held at that time. Many members of one company were residents of the southern part of what is now Schoharie county, then Albany, and we find the names of some enrolled as members of the Fifteenth Regiment and of Captain Hager's company.

John Harper, Colonel.

It is not positively claimed that Colonel Harper was a Schoharie county man, and it is conceded that he may have resided in the present county of Delaware. His services during the Revolution were so connected with the military operations in the valley from the beginning to the close of the war, that I give his appointment.

Captain of Rangers, July 17, 1777.

Lieutenant-colonel of Second Regiment of Levies and Militia, May 11, 1780. Afterward colonel of Fifth Tryon County Regiment of Levies, taking rank from March 3, 1780. He served as guide of General James Clinton on the Western expedition, 1779.

St. Leger Cowley, Adjutant, belonged to the First Company of Rangers, entering the service in 1777. Afterward appointed adjutant of the Fifth Tryon County Levies, March 3, 1780. He was the father of Jonathan Cowley, who served in the same war, and the great-grandfather of Hector and Charles Cowley, who were killed during the war of the rebellion, and of William S. Cowley of Stamford, N. Y.

Alexander Harper, Captain, was appointed first lieutenant of Rangers, July 17, 1777. Appointed captain "in the beat wherein he resides," March 3, 1780, enrolled in the Fifth Regiment of Levies, but serving under Colonel Vroman. Was captured by Indians and Tories under Brandt, near Harpersfield, April 7, 1780, while in command of a detachment sent out to make sugar. According to the narrative of Freegift Patchen, three of the number were killed, while Harper and the ten survivors of his detachment were taken to Canada, where they were held prisoners until the treaty of peace was ratified.

Thomas Henry, Second Major, was appointed second lieutenant, July 17, 1777, and promoted to second major on the staff of Colonel Harper in the Fifth Regiment of Militia, March 3, 1780.

Ezra Thorp

stands on the roster as belonging to this company under Lieutenant-Colonel Zielie. He is mentioned in the narrative as "Lieutenant Ezra Thorp." No mention of his appointment to office is made in the archives. He may have been chosen to fill vacancy made by the promotion of Major Henry, and may have been acting as second lieutenant at the time of his capture, April 7, 1780, with Captain Harper. He was held prisoner at Canada until the close of the war.

William Lamb,

one of the number captured by Brandt, September 7, 1780. Released November 28, 1782. After his return, settled in the town of Harpersfield, Delaware county, N. Y.

The foregoing comprise all names on the roster for this company.

As before stated, some of its members became attached to Captain Hager's company, while others became members in the Fifth Regiment, and their residence as Schoharie men cannot be certified.

Adam Strobeck,

assigned to no company. Was enrolled at one time in Captain Gross' company of Willett's regiment. "Wounded in the arm and back, July 7, 1781," M. R. Pensioned afterward.

John Philip Kerker

did secret service as scout and messenger, with head-quarters for a time at the Lower Fort. Was captured at Moak's Hollow, with Lientenant Borst and Sergeant Kniskern. Released after the war. He was a native of Germany and came from "Bingen on the Rhine." Grandson, Solomon. Great-grandsons, Solomon D., Joseph, Harman, Franklin.

RIFLEMEN.

Timothy Murphey,

Murphey was an Irishman, "by occupation," and naturally fond of adventure. A man of quick perceptions and a fearless nature. His boldness and skill in warfare against Indians and Tories soon made him a special object for their vengeance, but in his encounters with them he generally balanced accounts to his credit. If Murphey possessed the unlimited courage attributed to him by traditional romances, they evidently err in making him the perpetrator of some of the brutal and inhuman acts which are related so faithfully after the dime novel pattern of literature. Courage in the face of danger is never found in a brutal or revengeful nature. That he met cunning with strategy, when his own life or interests were at stake, goes without saying, but that he indulged in bloody acts without pressing occasions, we must either deny, or abandon the claim that Tim Murphey was a hero. Timothy Murphey was fond of adventure to the extent that he would incur any risk to gratify the spirit. He looked out for "number one" on all occasions, and his policy carried him through, and under his leadership, the men who trusted him. To his mind, the possession of Margaret Feek and, later on, her father's broad acres appeared very desirable, and to a man of his nature the accomplishment followed a determination. Margaret gave him the key to the city without protest, and time and a little more strategy brought the surrender of the whole garrison. The exact date of Murphey's coming to Schoharie is not evident. I conclude from histories, that he came with Captain Long's detachment of Morgan's Rifle Corps during the late summer or fall of 1778, and that, with the exception of his term of service in the Sullivan campaign, he served with the Schoharie County Militia from the fall of 1778 until the close of the war. He was enrolled in the Fifteenth Regiment and in Captain Hager's company, but evidently served under a "roving commission," as we find him at the head of several expeditions sent out to arrest prominent Tories and break up their rendezvous with their Indian allies." He contracted a runaway marriage at Schenectady on October 1, 1780, and on his return to the Middle Fort his wedding was celebrated by a great jubilee and "High Jinks." A day or two after his celebration he accompanied a scouting expedition to the Susquehanna, then to Cairo, and thence back to Schoharie, after an absence of thirteen days, and the day previous to the invasion by Johnson. On that day he performed good service on the skirmish line before Johnson invested the fort, and afterward fired on the flag of truce sent by Johnson, in defiance of the orders of Major Woolsey. He accompanied the party in pursuit of Brandt and Chrysler after the invasion of Vroman's land in November, 1781. After the close of the war a reconciliation was effected between his father-in-law and himself, when he adopted a farmer's life and pursuits. His wife, Margaret, died September 1, 1807. Murphey remarried. Died June 27, 1818. Grandchildren, William, Eliza Best, Catharine M. Banks. Great-grandchild, Marion M. Swart.

David Ellerson

came to Schoharie in 1778, and belonged to Captain Long's detachment of Morgan's Rifle Corps. He was an inseparable companion of Murphey in his scouting expeditions, and is on record as equally skillful as a marksman. He was a Virginian by birth and had been wounded in the shoulder by a bullet during Indian troubles in his native State. He accompanied Murphey on his mission to arrest Service in the Charlotte Valley. He did effective service as a skirmisher at the time Johnson attacked the Middle Fort. Soon after coming to Schoharie he laid siege to the "hertz" of one of her daughters and captured the garrison. After the war he settled in the southern part of the county. Died in "1838 or 1839," at a very advanced age.

Philip Hover,

a member of Captain Long's detachment of riflemen, acquired great popularity through his skill as marksman and scout. He was certainly not less skilled in warfare against the common enemy than his comrades Murphey and Ellerson, as we find him possessed of a wife, who was captured during the invasion of Brandt, August 8, 1780, but released on the day following. On that day he was one of the scouts sent out to West Fulton to reconnoiter, but through the unfortunate zeal of his comrade Leek, was unable to reach the Upper Fort by a direct route and until the enemy had captured or massacred the inhabitants. Aside from services as a scout, he was engaged in the operations without and within the Middle Fort during the invasion of Johnson. He remained a resident of the county for a time unknown after the war.

John Wilbur — Williber

was a resident of Pennsylvania and a carpenter by occupation. He is especially mentioned as a brave soldier and as maintaining the rank by marrying a Schoharie girl—"Miss Mattice." At the time Johnson appeared near the Middle Fort he shot a disguised Tory who was attempting to steal a horse. After the war he settled in the Charlotte Valley.

Richard Haggadorn, Sergeant, was a member of the detachment of riflemen, and served with his comrades until mortally wounded in the engagement at Panther Mountain in November, 1781. He was rescued from the enemy and taken to the Upper Fort, where he died on the day after. It was on the occasion of his rescue that Murphey remarked, "every bullet was not moulded to hit."

William Leek

became noted through his rashness, in firing at a tempting mark, while scouting in the vicinity of West Fulton. He had been sent out with two others to reconnoiter for the enemy, with orders to return to the fort without exciting the attention of the enemy, if he was found to be in the neighborhood. While he was in hiding near the stream, a surgeon of Brandt's party, disguised as an Indian, approached for the purpose of obtaining water—when Leek, forgetting orders and prudence, shot the Englishman, and by the report of his gun brought the whole camp of savages on his trail. In the race for his own safety, he was unable to give warning to the Upper Fort before its inhabitants were surprised and captured. During the war or near its close, he married the wife of a man who had gone to Canada at the beginning of the war, and who was supposed to be dead, as nothing had been heard from him since his departure. After peace became established, the exile returned to find himself "outside the breast-works," while William, the scout, held the fort. Leek, with his wife, removed to Cayuga county soon afterward, where he died.—Tradition.

Conradt Winnie

was one of the scouts sent on the reconnoissance to West Fulton. He barely escaped capture by taking a "roundabout" route to the valley, and finding the enemy in possession of the ground. His survivors cannot be definitely traced.

Felix Hoever

belonged to Long's detachment of Morgan's Rifles, and served as scout and ranger.

Joseph Evans

was a member of the Rifle Corps, and served in the valley, as a resident, and settled in the southern part of the county after the war. He married the daughter of Teunis Eckerson.

Christopher France

lived in the western part of the county, known as "Turlach." He served as scout and messenger between his neighborhood and the Lower and Middle Forts, and was with the defenders of the Lower Fort at the time Johnson plundered the valley and the day previous to the murder of his fiancee, Catharine Marelay.

Sebastian France

did partisan service as scout and courier. Grandsons, Abram, Gilbert, Sebastian and William.

Zachariah Tufts

was enrolled in Bogart's company of Harper's regiment, from May to November, 1780. Previous to and subsequent to that enrollment he served under both Richtmyer and Hager as ranger.

James Turner.

Jesse Gilbert

resided in Dutchess county previous to the beginning of the Revolution and became enrolled for Militia service in the Third Regiment under Captain Broadhead late in the year 1775. After expiration of term we find him again enrolled in Colonel John Hathorn's regiment and called out "on alarm at Minisink" in July, 1777. On the organization of the regiment "for the immediate defense of the State" under Lieutenant-Colonel Albert Pawling, we find him enrolled in that organization under Captain Gilbert I. Livingston, April 27, 1781. Soon after this enrollment he came to Schoharie county with a detachment and remained through the war. He soon became a favorite of Murphey and accompanied him in his expeditions, accepting and answering to the name of "Joot," bestowed by the bold Irishman. He participated in the action at Jefferson Lake; also escaped with Murphey by breaking through the line of Indians when they found themselves unexpectedly surrounded. He received a bayonet wound in the side and directly under the right arm during a charge in the engagement with the Indians and Tories under Butler. After the end of the war he married and became a farmer in the town of Harpersfield and later removed to a farm near the present village of Stamford, and added the occupation of miller to that of farmer. He afterward removed to and occupied a farm at the base of what is now called "Mount Utsyantho," where he died in the year 1838. Lies buried in the old burying ground in the westerly part of Stamford. He was the father of three sons and five daughters. Representative descendants living: Grandchildren, Francis R., Ebenezer, Jr., Betsey Churchill, Mrs. David Kennedy. Great-grandchildren, F. Newell, Jesse B., Minnie E., Frank B., Samuel, Eliza H., Henry, William Kimball.

PRISON REPORT OF THE REVOLUTION.

The taking of prisoners has been legitimate warfare in all ages, but their treatment after being deprived of the power to harm, has not always been so considered by those who fought for justice and humanity and were so unfortunate as to fall into the hands of an unscrupulous foe. When the English King or his agents employed savages to subdue the Colonists and fixed the market price of the scalp of a "Rebel," his wife or child, the same when delivered at head-quarters as for their living bodies, there was no restraint placed upon murder, and if the captive survived the journey to Canada he owed his life as much to the mercy of the Indian as to the pity of the white man who would have paid as much for his scalp as his life. The policy of the British leaders in their system of rewards was both subtle and barbarous. It laid the onus of all unprovoked murders upon the shoulders of the Indian, while it stimulated him to commit them, and at the same time gave him license to be revenged on those who had incurred his displeasure before the war. The common price paid for a prisoner or the scalp of a "Rebel" was $8, although in special cases where the capture of a person of prominence was sought, the reward offered was much larger. After all the cruelty of the savage has been estimated, I think he excelled his white employer in two comparisons. During the long and terrible journeys to Canada the prisoner shared equally with the captor in the distribution of food, and in many cases the Indian remembered a kindness shown him in former days by his captive. The Patriots could reasonably divide their common enemy into three classes, so far as degrees of humanity might govern their acts, and the Indian would take first rank. The regular army of the King and his representatives would follow next, while the Tory, the neighbor and fellow-countryman of the Patriot would win the championship for out-Heroding them all in barbarity. Nearly, if not all, of the prisoners captured in the Schoharie, were taken by way of what is now Richmondville and Summit, West Fulton and Summit, and Blenheim and Jefferson. These routes converged in the valley of the Charlotte and continued to the Susquehanna. Another route taken by the prisoners captured at Harpersfield extended down the head waters of the Delaware and thence across the mountains to the Susquehanna. These journeys were all made down the Susquehanna as "far as the mouth of the Chemung river" and thence in a north-westerly direction through the State to the "Genesee county" and to the British post at Niagara. If the prisoner escaped the gauntlet of knives, clubs, fists, whips and stones, at the Indian villages, he was taken to the British post and paid for. After delivery to the officers the prisoners were disposed of in various ways. Some were rented out as laborers and servants to persons residing in the vicinity, or required to do menial service for the government, while others were kept in close confinement and subjected to severe treatment.

We read of some who remained in Canada after the war, and of a few men who adopted the Indian life and customs. A few were comparatively well treated. Nearly all prisoners were held until the close of the war if not ransomed, and a few who were held as servants or slaves did not return until some time afterward. A large number of the prisoners taken from Schoharie were non-combatants and not belonging to the military or enrolled for service. A few old men, many women, boys and girls, made the terrible journey of between two and three hundred miles under the goad of their captors, with the shrieks of their murdered wife, brother, sister, mother or neighbor, still ringing in their ears, and with no hope of life before them. The number who made the journey must be sought out from narrative, history, tradition, and the archives of the Revolution — sources which do not give a complete total.

CHAPTER I.

COPY OF COMMISSION ISSUED.

The People of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent.

To John Warner, greeting.

WE reposing especial trust and confidence as well in your patriotism, conduct and loyalty, as in your integrity and readiness to do us good and faithful service, Have appointed and constituted, and by these presents Do appoint and constitute you the said John Warner Captain of a Company in the 113th Regiment of Infantry of our said State; you are therefore to take said Company into your charge and care, as Captain thereof, and duly to exercise the Officers and Soldiers of that Company in arms, who are hereby commanded to obey you as their Captain; and you are also to observe and follow such orders and directions as you shall from time to time receive from our General and Commander in Chief of the Militia of our said State, or any other your superior officer, according to the Rules and Discipline of War, in pursuance of the trust reposed in you; and for so doing this shall be your Commission for and during our good pleasure, to be signified by our Council of Appointment.

In Testimony whereof, We have caused our Seal for Military Commissions to be hereunto affixed: Witness our trusty and well beloved John Taylor Esquire Lient. Governor of said State, General and Commander in Chief of all the Militia, and Admiral of the Navy of the same, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council of Appointment, at our city of Albany, the Fourth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen,—and in the 41st year of our independence.

JOHN TAYLOR.

[Seal Passed the secretary's office the 24th Day of April 1817.]

CHARLES D. COOPER Secretary.

WAR OF 1812.

The causes leading to the war of 1812 and '14 may, in a general way, be set down as equally aggravating and oppressive as those which brought on the war of the Revolution. Before the former war England claimed the right to control the government, commercial interests, and revenue of the Colonies. After the Revolution and as early as 1794, she insisted upon her right to search American vessels for deserting British seamen; a practice which led to the impressment of American sailors under a pretense. England was undisputed ruler of the seas, and any forcible resistance to her system of wholesale kidnapping was met by overpowering force. In June of 1807, the commander of the English frigate "Leopard" opened fire on the American frigate "Chesapeake," after its commander had refused to suffer search of his vessel, or show the muster-roll of his crew. After this insult, President Jefferson issued a proclamation ordering all British vessels to leave American waters. The British government disavowed the act of the admiral commanding their fleet, but still maintained the "right of search"; which was simply the right in nearly every case to recruit the crews of her navy by impressing American sailors. The episode of 1807 contributed to make British naval officers more insolent and aggressive; while on the other hand it awoke the American people from their apathy and forbearance. A system of discipline and training was introduced into the naval service, and the crews of trading vessels were trained to repel hostile attacks, which bore fruit in the war which followed, in overthrowing the supremacy of "Britannia" on the high seas. Owing to the insignificance of the American Navy, wholesale spoliation of American ships continued, vessels were seized, crews impressed, remonstrances ignored, and to complete the servitude of the States, a "paper blockade" was set forth, forbidding intercourse with other nations. France prohibited trade with England, and England declared an embargo against all countries from which her ships were excluded. To this Napoleon replied by declaring that any vessel, of whatever nation, which submitted to English search would be liable to capture as English property. And thus the commerce of America came between two fires. In these unjust acts, Napoleon was the most reasonable of the two powers. It is estimated, that during the five years preceding the war of 1812, over one thousand American vessels, with their cargoes, were captured. In March, 1809, James Madison assumed the executive, and the British minister proposed a settlement of disputes between the two countries. His proposals were very gratifying to the American people. A treaty was ratified by the American Cabinet on the 19th of April, 1809. Relying on the sincerity of the British minister, President Madison issued a proclamation to the American people, that trade between the United States and England would be resumed on the 10th of June following. The British government disavowed the treaty, recalled Minister Erskine, and appointed F. J. Jackson as his successor, who subsequently and publicly insulted the American government by his insolent language. Insolence and abuses on the part of the British Navy continued without hindrance or reparation until the night of May 16, 1811, when, off the coast of Virginia, Commodore Rodgers, of the United States frigate "President" hailed a strange vessel in the darkness. His hail was answered by a shot, and broadsides from both vessels followed. The enemy proved to be the English sloop of war "Little Belt," and her loss of thirty-two men killed and wounded should have convinced her commanding officer, Captain Bingham, that his manner of answering a civil question, on a dark night, was not in accordance with American etiquette. This determined act of resistance was productive of some good, but the teasing insolence of British naval officers and the seizure of American vessels continued. After negotiations, Napoleon repealed his restrictions to American commerce, April 28, 1811, and England followed June 23, 1812, but her duplicity and stubbornness had deferred action until too late to avert the punishment which followed. On June 1, President Madison, in a message to Congress, proposed war, and after an excited debate a declaration of war was passed in the House by a majority of thirty, and in the Senate by a majority of six, and signed by the President on the 18th of June, 1812. At this time party spirit ran high, and as there was strong opposition to the war among the wealthy and speculating class of people in the eastern cities, the two questions, purse or principle, as in other critical periods of our history, divided the people to a serious extent. War between the two countries was inaugurated by Commodore Rodgers on the 21st of June, and three days after the declaration, by sailing in search of the British lion on his own highway. During the remainder of the year a series of victories were gained by Yankee skill and "pluck," which surprised both nations. Yankee privateers also made handsome returns, in the capture of between two and three hundred prizes before the end of the year. During the war of 1812 and 1814, the American sailor had potent cause to fight the "Sea Robber," and the victories he achieved stand unprecedented in naval warfare. We crown him hero, and commend him with his commanders, Rodgers, Hull, Decatur, Jones, Porter and Bainbridge, to the unlimited respect of a free people. We will now refer to affairs nearer home, and within the province of this record. The campaign began by the occupation of Detroit, by General Hull at the head of about two thousand five hundred Militia. The British, as usual, had gathered a large force of Indians for service, and with an army contingent, took advantage of the cowardice or imbecility of General Hull, to gain important posts and positions. After a few weak and vacillating attacks, and on his position being threatened by the British General Brock, he surrendered his army. Hull was exchanged for thirty prisoners, court-martialed and sentenced to be hung; but like other traitors, his life was spared. While repeated victories crowned the efforts of the navy, disaster and defeat met our army along the frontier at every step. Drafts of Militia from Ohio, Kentucky and Pennsylvania were made in August, and on the 24th of September General William H. Harrison was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the North-west.

The principal American posts on the northern frontier were, Sackett's Harbor and Plattsburg — Buffalo, Black Rock and Lewiston being in the series, but located on the so-called Niagara frontier.

On the 11th of October, 1812, an attack was made by General Van Rensselaer, with a large force of Militia and a detachment of Regulars, on Queenstown, opposite Lewiston. Van Rensselaer at the head of one hundred men crossed the river and silenced the fort. Both sides being reinforced, a general engagement ensued, and success appeared assured, but when the Militia were called upon, they refused to cross the river, beyond the territory of the United States.

General Van Rensselaer was obliged to abandon the advantage gained, and recross the river with a loss of six hundred killed and wounded and thirty captured.

Van Rensselaer resigned, and General Smyth, of the Regular Army, was assigned as his successor, but did nothing to encourage the people or the troops under him. In the meantime, war vessels had been set afloat on the lakes by both powers. On Lake Ontario, Commodore Chauncey commanded seven small schooners, which maintained the supremacy throughout the season against double the force of the enemy. The only armed vessel on Lake Erie at the beginning of the war had been surrendered at Detroit.

In November, 1812, Congress negotiated for peace on condition that British seamen should not be employed on American vessels, and that England should not employ American subjects on British vessels. The British government refused to entertain the proposal, and still claimed the right to impress American seamen. Early in June, 1813, General Harrison sent out two detachments under General Winchester and Colonel Lewis, which were successful, and concentrated at Frenchtown in the present State of Michigan, and below Detroit.

Here Winchester neglected precaution, and was unexpectedly attacked at daylight on the 22d of January, by British and Indians under Colonel Proctor. Winchester and Lewis were taken prisoners and a portion of their troops routed, while the remainder held their position. Proctor assured the American general that unless the balance of his troops surrendered they would be taken and massacred by the Indians, but if they would lay down their arms immediately, they would be treated as prisoners of war. Under a flag of truce, Winchester ordered his men to surrender, and after their compliance, they were tomahawked, shot and burned alive, while Proctor made no effort to prevent the inhuman slaughter. The massacre at Frenchtown aroused the people of Ohio and Kentucky, and large bodies of volunteers joined General Harrison. During the spring, Fort Meigs was erected at the rapids of the Miami river. On the 1st of May, this place was besieged by a large force of British and Indians under Proctor. On the 6th of May, General Clay with one thousand two hundred Kentuckians charged on the besiegers from several points, and drove them from their position. The Kentuckians became careless and scattered after their supposed victory, and were charged in turn by the British, and completely routed. On the 9th the enemy raised the siege and retreated.

Early in the spring of 1813, a body of troops had been concentrated at Sackett's Harbor, under General Dearborn. After naval preparations had been sufficiently completed, General Dearborn with one thousand seven hundred men embarked for an attack on York, the capital of Upper Canada. An advance party under General Pike gained the shore, drove the enemy from their outer works, and after being joined by the remaining troops, carried the first battery by assault. At this moment the enemy's magazine exploded, hurling a shower of stones and timbers upon the victorious Americans. Although the city fell to the Americans, the victory cost them dearly in the loss of three hundred and twenty killed and wounded; and nearly all by the explosion. General Pike was mortally wounded. According to tradition, his body was preserved in a pipe of rum, for transmission home. On the 27th of May, Fort George was captured from the British. During a night engagement, June 5th at Stony Creek, Generals Winder and Chandler of the American Army were taken prisoners. On the same day the Americans attacked Fort George, the British made an attack on Sackett's Harbor. The Militia stationed at that post, numbering about one thousand under General Brown, fled at the first assault, but the Regulars under Colonel Backus made a stubborn resistance, which enabled General Brown to rally his Militia, and by a stratagem, to create a panic among the enemy and cause him to retreat to his boats, and pull for the other shore. From February to July, the notorious Admiral Cockburn amused himself by burning villages, plundering farm-houses, and committing revolting outrages upon the inhabitants along the shores of Chesapeake bay.

In August of 1813, the British began a campaign against all the American posts along the Erie frontier. Sufficient volunteers had not arrived to warrant an attempt to hold all those positions, and General Harrison ordered Major Croghan, a young officer commanding a small fort at Lower Sandusky, to retire, if attacked, after destroying the works. With a force of one hundred and sixty men and one six pounder the young major took the responsibility of disobeying his superior officer, when attacked by Proctor with five hundred Regulars, seven hundred Indians and some gunboats. Proctor charged the little fort with his overwhelming force, but his men were cut down and routed, with a loss to the Americans of but one killed and seven wounded. Croghan and his companions were highly complimented by General Harrison, and received the thanks of Congress, while the major received promotion. Meantime Commodore Perry had been making great effort to complete and arm a fleet on Lake Erie.

On August 4, 1813, he was able to leave Port Erie, and on the 13th he anchored in the Bay of Sandusky. At this place he received additional troops and started on a cruise with a fleet of nine vessels and fifty-four guns. On the 10th of September, at Put-in-

Bay, the fleet of the enemy, consisting of six larger vessels and carrying sixty-three guns, was discovered advancing to the attack. At a quarter to twelve, noon, the enemy's flag-ship, "Queen Charlotte," opened fire on Perry's vessel, "The Lawrence," which he was soon compelled to abandon and transfer his flag to another vessel, "The Niagara," under the fire of the enemy. After a contest of three hours every vessel belonging to the enemy was captured, and Commodore Perry announced his victory to the people by the message: "We have met the enemy and they are ours." The American loss was twenty-seven killed and ninety-six wounded, while the loss to the British amounted to two hundred killed and wounded and six hundred prisoners; more than the whole number of Americans engaged.

On the 2d of October General Harrison, at the head of about three thousand five hundred men, crossed the river near Malden, Canada, and overtook the enemy at the Moravian towns on the Thames on the 5th. At this time the American force consisted of the Ohio contingent and four thousand Kentuckians under General Shelby. After preparation the Americans charged upon the enemy, who made a short resistance. The greatest opposition was made by the noted Indian chief, Tecumseh, and his followers, and after that warrior was slain by the Kentucky colonel, Johnson, the fight was abandoned. Proctor, who had been in command, fled at the first charge of the Americans and escaped. This victory ended hostilities from the Indians. Detroit was occupied by General Cass with about one thousand men, and General Harrison with the balance of his army proceeded to Buffalo.

The successes of the North-western Army had opened the way to invade Canada under less difficulties. A strong force had been collected and were commanded by more experienced officers. After the death of Tecumseh the Indians declared themselves hostile to the British. General Wilkinson had been transferred from the South to the command of the Ontario frontier, having eight thousand men under him, and augmented by the troops under General Harrison; General Hampton with about four thousand men occupied Plattsburg. During October operations against the enemy were initiated by the occupation of Grenadier Island at the head of the St. Lawrence river, and between Sackett's Harbor and Kingston. The plan of the campaign embraced the descent of the St. Lawrence, passing the British posts, the concentration of troops, and after forming a junction with the troops under General Hampton from Plattsburg, the invasion of Montreal. On the 6th of November the army was put in motion with the advance under the command of Brigadier-General Brown, and in the evening landed a few miles above the British Fort Prescott. After a reconnoissance the ammunition was transported to a safe point below the fort by land, while the flotilla and troops passed safely down the river, but not without being discovered and fired on. Before ten o'clock of the 7th the whole army had reached Ogdensburg. Two vessels of the flotilla had been driven to shelter near Ogdensburg by the enemy's fire, but after some skirmishing were released by the army. After leaving Ogdensburg the advance of the American troops was contested both by land and water, though not seriously interrupted. On the 11th a serious engagement took place at Chrysler's Field, which resulted in the withdrawal of both armies. On the same day the Americans concentrated at a place called Barnhart. At Ogdensburg, Wilkinson had sent couriers to Hampton at Plattsburg, requesting his co-operation, and at Barnhart he received a reply that Hampton could not join him at St. Regis as ordered.

During the latter half of October, Hampton had descended the Chateaugay river on a reconnoissance, crossing the boundary line on the 21st to find his course obstructed by Sir George Provost, who had suspected the design of the Americans against Montreal. After several skirmishes with the enemy, and finding his advance obstructed, Hampton retreated and went into winter quarters at French's Mills. With his failure to join Wilkinson afterward, the campaign ended, to the disgust of the people, who had expected much. But not so with the little fleet under Chauncey. From the 17th of September until winter he chased the British Admiral Sir James Yeo from port to port, making some captures and remaining master of Lake Ontario. General Harrison arrived at Buffalo soon after the departure of Wilkinson, but for want of transports was unable to follow until he had gone into winter quarters. During December, the term of service of the Militia under him having expired, General McClure in command at Fort George blew up the fort and retired across the river. On the 19th, Fort Niagara was surprised by British forces under Colonel Murray, and the garrison put to the sword. Lewiston and other small villages along the Niagara were burned, and many of the inhabitants butchered. On the 30th of December, a detachment of British crossed at Black Rock, proceeded to Buffalo, burned that village and devastated the adjoining country. At the end of the year 1813, the prosecution of the war against England had become more popular. The continued series of victories over the naval forces of England, on both ocean and lakes, had aroused the courage and gratitude of the nation, while the system of warfare adopted by the British, and supplemented by the Indian massacres in Georgia, aroused a spirit of determination to drive the enemy from American territory.

During the winter of 1813 and 1814 a brisk war was carried on against the Creek Nation of Indians who had begun hostilities the summer previous. They were defeated in several engagements, and in the spring of 1814 the greater part of them surrendered. A treaty of peace, in severe terms, was dictated by General Jackson during the summer following, which the Indians accepted. In February, 1814, the Northern Army removed from winter quarters to Plattsburg, and from that point a detachment of two thousand men under General Brown marched to Sackett's Harbor, and in March to Niagara.

On March 30, 1814, General Wilkinson crossed the Canada line and attacked the enemy at La Cole Mill, near Rouse's Point, and was defeated with a loss of over one hundred and forty men killed and wounded. During the fall and winter of 1813 and 1814, Commodore McDonough had been busily engaged in building a fleet for the protection of Lake Champlain, but did not receive the necessary guns and ordnance stores until spring. On the 25th of April, an attempt was made by the British to blow up the American fleet lying in Sackett's Harbor, which failed. Early in May, Sir James Yeo bombarded Oswego, and after a third attempt landed his force and captured the town, but failed to secure the naval stores — the object of the expedition. On the 29th of May a party of four lieutenants of the British Navy, with two lieutenants of Marines and one hundred and thirty men, were captured at Sandy Creek, below Oswego. The campaign on the Niagara did not open until July. On the 2d, General Brown crossed the river and captured Fort Erie. On the 5th, he advanced against General Rial, who was posted in a very strong position at Chippeway. A general engagement took place on the plain before the town, in which the British were repulsed and driven to their batteries, when, night coming on, the battle ended. Great praise was due the Americans for this victory, as most of the troops engaged were raw recruits, while the enemy were veterans who had fought in Europe. General Brown continued his advance while the enemy fell back in the direction of Fort George. After some skirmishing the two armies met for battle, on the 25th of July, at Bridgewater near Niagara Falls, and after a stubborn and unequal contest the enemy were driven from the field. Generals

Brown and Scott were both wounded during this battle. The American Army fell back to Fort Erie and began strengthening its defenses. General Drummond appeared before the place on the 3d of August, and began a siege which lasted until before daybreak of the 15th, when his forces stormed the fort in three columns, under the order to "give no quarter." Under such circumstances the fighting became desperate, and the British were defeated with a loss of five hundred and ninety-two killed, wounded, and prisoners. Among the killed of the enemy were fourteen officers, including General Drummond, who gave the infamous order. The loss to the Americans was eighty-three. The enemy remained in three positions in front and rear of the fort until the 17th of September, when the Americans made a sortie on the British batteries in their front, carried the works, spiked the cannon, and took the besiegers prisoners back to Fort Erie.

The Americans lost five hundred and eleven men; the British one thousand men and their cannon. Near the 1st of September Sir George Prevost led his army against Plattsburg, while his fleet proceeded up the lake on his left, for a combined attack on that place. To oppose his large force, General McComb had but one thousand five hundred troops and no proper defenses. He called on General Mooers for New York Militia, and received about seven hundred men. With this small force he harassed the enemy on his march to Plattsburg. General McComb abandoned the town and fortified himself on the south side of the Saranac river, opposite, by removing the planks from the bridge and converting them into breast-works. Instead of making an immediate assault, the British commander erected works and began a siege. By the 11th of September a considerable force of New York and Vermont Militia had been collected, and stationed along the south bank of the Saranac. After the first day's service under fire, the Militia bore up to the work bravely, and resisted all attempts of the enemy to cross. In the meantime Commodore McDonough with his little fleet of four ships and ten galleys, carrying eighty-six guns, lay in Plattsburg bay, awaiting the British flotilla, which had been delayed. At eight o'clock on the morning of the 11th of September, 1814, the British fleet were sighted, and at nine o'clock it came to anchor abreast of the American squadron, and about three hundred yards distant. A fierce conflict began at once, between the two fleets, and between the two armies on shore. The fight on the water was carried on with such obstinacy and fierceness, that when the enemy were obliged to surrender, there was scarcely a mast in either squadron capable of carrying a sail.

While the two squadrons were fighting, the British were making desperate efforts to cross the river, and failing in each attempt. Under cover of the night, Provost retreated with his baggage and artillery, leaving his sick and wounded behind. A large quantity of military stores fell into the hands of the Americans. The unusual feature of a battle between opposing powers, on land and water, so near as to be almost united, characterizes the battle of Plattsburg as a notable engagement in the list of battles of modern times. The victory gained by the Americans over a number so greatly superior is the highest compliment to their bravery, and gave to the wag poet license to tell how "McDonough had a little boat" and whipped "Provost on a little pond, back side of Albany." The battle of Plattsburg ended the series of noteworthy engagements on our northern frontier.

During April, and early summer of 1814, the British invaded many ports along the north Atlantic coast. In the middle of August a fleet of sixty sail under Admiral Cockburn entered the Chesapeake bay, and landed six thousand men at Benedict, Md., on the Patuxent river. This force reached Bladensburg, dispersed the Militia, and on the 24th of August the Capital fell into the enemy's hands, and by order of General Ross, the Capital, President's House, Executive offices, Navy Yard and ships were burned. On the 11th of September the enemy's fleet appeared at the mouth of the Patapsco river, fourteen miles below Baltimore.

On the day following, a force of six thousand men, veterans from Wellington's Army, was landed at North Point. On the 13th they were met by General Stryker with three thousand Militia, who fell back after a sharp skirmish, in which the British General Ross was killed. After the American retreat had been continued for a time, their artillery opened fire, and the engagement became general; during which General Stryker contended against great odds until late in the afternoon, when he was obliged to retreat. In the meantime, bomb vessels from the British fleet had opened fire on Fort McHenry from a distance of two miles, and were gradually approaching, when a heavy fire from the fort compelled them to regain their first position. The bombardment continued through the day and night, during which time the inhabitants of Baltimore awaited the result, anxious and sleepless. But, "By the dawn's early light" they saw that "our flag was still there." On the morning of the 14th the bombardment ceased, and during the following night the land force of the enemy retreated and were followed by their fleet. During September, October, November and December, the English were operating along the coast bordering the Gulf of Mexico. An invitation was extended to La Fitte, the Pirate, who had been outlawed by the United States, to join in the invasion, and he had refused, but under offer of pardon by the Governor of Louisiana, he joined the Americans.

General Jackson, who had been engaged in the Creek war, marched to Pensacola, and captured that place on the 7th of November. Learning of danger to New Orleans, he repaired to that place. Reaching it December 2, he began active preparations for defense. He constructed a breast-work, eight miles below New Orleans, extending from the river on his right, to a cypress swamp on his left. On the 28th of December, and before his defenses were complete, the British made an attack, but were forced to retreat. In this affair the British force amounted to fifteen thousand Regular troops, while the Americans numbered six thousand men and chiefly raw Militia. On January 7 the American defenses were complete, and the English made preparations for an apparently successful attack, and on the morning following they moved on the American works with twelve thousand men in two columns, supported by a reserve, and a detachment sent to operate against the right of Jackson's works. Perfect silence prevailed behind the American intrenchments until the enemy came within effective range of the batteries, when a destructive fire was opened.

The British pressed on until within range of the muskets of the Militia, when the fire became so destructive as to throw them into confusion. In attempting to restore order the British commander, Sir Edward Pakenham, was killed. Two of his generals, Gibbs and Keane, succeeded in moving their columns forward the second time, to meet greater destruction than at the first advance. The advancing columns broke in the third attempt to rally them, and Gibbs was mortally wounded and Keane seriously. The remaining general, Lambert, being unable to check the flight of the enemy, retired to his encampment. The detachment sent against Jackson's right met with greater success, and had succeeded in driving the right of the line from their position, but the disastrous repulse of the enemy in front caused the British Colonel Thornton to retreat across the river. On the night of the 8th the British abandoned their camp and in all haste they re-embarked and left the county. The British lion had cuffed and clawed poor Tray until he was ready to fight for his rights. On the 24th of December, previous to the battle of New Orleans, a treaty of peace had been signed, and on the 18th of February it was ratified by the Senate of the United States.

GROWLS.

The muster-out rolls or military record of the New York State troops who served in the war of 1812 are and have been in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury at Washington for several years. As they embrace the muster out of the members of Van Vechten's Battalion and Kellogg Artillery, which appears to be the only military record in existence ; without data from them the men cannot be arranged in order with record of service and a full roster of those serving given. After meeting with unexpected success in collecting data of other wars and receiving encouragement and assistance from comrades, the public, and chief of bureau, and librarian in our State, it is extremely disappointing, after making three applications and stating the purposes for which information is wanted, and from New York State documents, to meet with refusal and equivocation and silence. I can conceive of no irregularity in a request for information solely for historical purposes, and I can find no justification for withholding it. There may be causes or reasons of a morbid nature, such as afflict some persons when feeding at the public crib and enjoying the blessings of life and liberty, secured to them by the blood and suffering of the common soldier whose record I wish to set up, that he may not be entirely ignored and forgotten by those who are competent to appreciate his services.

Aside from the roster of Kellogg's Artillery, the names of veterans given and other data, are obtained by inquiry and from the recollections of those related to or formerly acquainted with them. There appears to have been two levies for troops from this county during the war of 1812 and 1814. Troops raised under the first levy serving for a longer term by reason of the war closing about three months after the men under the last draft took the field. It appears that the men under the last call arrived at Plattsburg on the day following the battle and were in no engagements with the enemy during their service. I infer also that the first levies were of Van Vechten's Battalion and were stationed for a time at both Plattsburg and Sackett's Harbor. I give all information of the infantry Militia obtainable under such difficulties as attend inquiry after men whom one cannot name or describe.

KELLOGG'S VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY.

The military record of this organization, and the roster and record of its members, together with all facts placed on record, are compiled from a large collection of rolls, accounts, reports, letters, bonds, petitions, proceedings of courts-martial, general orders, etc., which were carefully preserved by Captain Kellogg, and which are now in the possession of his son, Giles L. Kellogg, to whom I am greatly indebted for the privilege of examining them, and for other courtesies.

I infer from data found that an independent organization of this kind existed as early as 1807, but no roster is found previous to June 1, 1812. It appears that a call for 50,000 volunteers was made by President Madison as early as February, 1812, presumably to be held in readiness in case war became necessary. On the 1st of June following, an enrollment of volunteers, for twelve months' service under the call, was made, from the company, but they were not called upon to take the field until December 19, 1812, under general orders from Albany, to-wit :

“Capt. Giles Kellogg's Company of Artillery, in the County of Schoharie, is required in the service for the further protection of our fellow citizens on the north-western frontier. They will rendezvous and be mustered on Sat. Dec. 26 and will be supplied with blankets and canteens, the whole will receive two months pay in advance, and the Non-Commissioned officers and musicians and privates will receive in addition thereto an advance of sixteen Dollars on account of allowance for clothing.”

Captain Kellogg issued orders to the sergeants and corporals of his company on December 20, requiring them to “warn” the persons named on the respective list appended, “to appear on parade at the Gun House in Cobleskill on Sat. the 26th Day of Dec. at 9 o'clock in the morning, with side arms, agreeable to General Orders." "The company will march on Monday the 28th of Dec. instant at 9 o'clock, when transportation will be furnished for them."

Upon mustering for service a few of the men furnished substitutes and a few wished to be excused; one, a constable, on the plea that he could not "leave his business."

Peter Shafer, Jr., and Adam Vrooman were paid $76, for transporting men and baggage from Cobleskill to Little Falls, and to Ogdensburg, and Peter Bouek, Peter Lampman, John Collins, Richard Davenport, John Franklin, Adam A. Shafer, David Lawyer and Lambert Lawyer were paid $20 for transporting men and baggage from Little Falls to Ogdensburg. On arriving at Ogdensburg in January, each member of the company was furnished with, and receipted for: "1 Musket and Bayonet, 1 Cartridge Box and Belt, 20 round musket ball cartridges and 4 Flints each." During the service at Ogdensburg, the company was assigned to the division commanded by Captain Forsyth, afterward mentioned as major, and in the spring at Sackett's Harbor, it was attached to Colonel Mills' regiment of Albany Volunteers. From the time the company arrived at Ogdensburg nothing important is shown to have transpired until the engagement of February 22, 1813, excepting the death of two men. We find from an account, charged under a requisition and dated February 15, 1813, that each of the rank and file of the company and "3 women" were supplied with twenty-six pounds of straw, and that ten days later, the captain received one cord and four feet of fuel; the lieutenants, one cord, two feet and eight inches each; the four sergeants, six feet; the four corporals, six feet; the six musicians, one cord; and thirty privates, five cords, five feet. On the 22d of February, 1813, the enemy stationed at Prescott, opposite Ogdensburg, made an attack, and during the engagement the company were defeated with a loss of every thing, except the clothing they had on and the arms they fought with. One drummer was killed, one fifer and one private were taken prisoners, one private killed and two wounded. I infer that the Americans were forced to abandon the post and retreat to Sackett's Harbor, and that an officer of this company was placed under arrest. His resignation was tendered and accepted by Colonel Pike, April 15, 1813, through orders dated Sackett's Harbor, May 3, 1813. On March 20, 1813, Captain Kellogg in a letter to Governor Tompkins states that "the company are sadly in need of clothing and money," and that the amount due for clothing is $916.75. On May 10, following, Governor Tompkins in a letter says: "Capt. Kellogg's company are entitled to pay at 8 dollars per month since the 26th of Feb. last — To $3 per month from 1st of January last to the 26th of Feb., and the balance of allowance for clothing over and above $16. On the 26th of Dec. the officers received two months' pay in advance, the soldiers each two months' pay in advance, at 5 dollars per month, and $16 on account of clothing. There being no paymaster authorized to pay such detached companies a volunteer or other paymaster is directed to pay and Maj. Allen is directed to pay by Special Ords."

After the transfer to Sackett's Harbor Captain Kellogg petitioned Governor Tompkins for permission to furlough some of the members of his company home for the purpose of obtaining supplies for the company, to replace losses incurred at Ogdensburg, and was referred to Colonel Pike.

From accounts rendered, it appears that no army surgeons were assigned to the command, as we find the sum of $16.25 paid to "Dr. J. Cowan for attendance on Sick," $40 paid to "Dr. John C. Herrick for attendance," and an itemized bill of $29.49 rendered by "Dr. W. Smith for Chirurgical attendance on William Youngs who lost his leg at Ogdensburg." Several men received furloughs in the spring or early summer of 1813, as we find their leave to have been extended on testimony taken by Jedediah Miller, Justice of the Peace, Dr. John C. Moeller testifying in one case. During the summer a few members of the company procured substitutes and came home, both principal and substitute giving prescribed bonds for the security of service. A court-martial was held during the term of the company's service for the benefit of one of its members. The culprit was charged with, 1st being absent from camp after ten o'clock, P. M., and, 2d, with stealing a bag of potatoes from inhabitants in the vicinity. Several testified to seeing the prisoner without the limits of the camp after the hour named, and the prisoner himself pleaded guilty to the second charge, and offered his knife as satisfaction for the potatoes, as he had no money. After due deliberation, and after a careful review of the testimony and pleadings the court decided to vacate the charges and release the prisoner as not guilty of malicious intent. The company appears to have been unfortunate again in an engagement with the enemy at "Horse Island, Sackett's Harbor, May 29, 1813," as an inventory of losses of "Personal Property" at that time amounts to $428.83½. There is nothing to show that it was particularly unfortunate in its movements during the balance of its service. I infer that it accompanied the expedition against York as part of the division under Colonel Pike, and that it was a part of the forces under Wilkinson on his expedition down the St. Lawrence. After going into winter quarters and under date of November 29, 1813, I find Captain Kellogg charged in a long itemized account, with oyster suppers, numerous items of gin, brandy, cider and rum, which would indicate that himself and men had celebrated their coming discharge from the service. An inspection held at Sackett's Harbor, September 30, 1813, accounted for thirty men present under arms, five sick, eight absent, and four deserted. A few men enlisted in the company from northern counties. Before entering the field service the armament of the company consisted of one field piece of artillery, and side arms or short sword for each man, and afterward as before stated, each man was armed with musket and bayonet in addition. Reports show that each member was armed with a feather and a cockade for his hat.

ROLL CALL.

Giles Kellogg, Captain.

Cobleskill — Merchant; married; aged 28; served through his term of enlistment; was recommended for appointment in the U. S. Army, by Major Benjamin Forsyth, under date, "Camp French Mills, November 17, 1813;" died October 29, aged 50. Children surviving, Giles L., Louisa C. Riley, Harriett Borst. CHAPTER II.

THE WAR WITH MEXICO.

Joint resolutions of Congress for the admission of Texas into the Union were approved by President Tyler, March 1, 1845, and accepted by Texas on the 29th of December of the same year. This act gave offense to the Mexican authorities, and their relations toward us assumed a hostile character. In the previous troubles of our country the foreign powers were clearly the aggressors, and the American people had been cruelly oppressed. But in our conduct toward Mexico there is apparent reason afforded to show that Mexico was being despoiled of territory to which her title was equally as good or better than the claim of the United States. An adventurer seeks profit at any cost except his own, and if the original owner of territory which he desires to possess resents intrusion, he will adopt a policy which will bring an influence of power to his aid, by assuming the character of a martyr, while the real victim is represented as the savage to be conquered. It may be argued that the residents of Texas desired annexation; it may be urged that our government desired it; and it may be shown that the Mexicans along the right bank of the Rio Grande were robbers and murderers, and exhibited their jealousy in inhuman acts to the class of fortune-seekers who were pre-empting the land which they considered theirs. At the time referred to, 1845, sufficient time had not elapsed since the crucifixion of Christ to warrant the theory that the majority is right in all cases. A few sentences in the Memoirs of General Grant clearly explain the theory of the origin and prosecution of the Mexican war, and in a manner both satisfactory and beyond argument. On the 28th of March, 1846, General Taylor took position on the bank of the Rio Grande opposite Matamoras and proceeded to erect fortifications which were afterward called Fort Brown. The first act of hostility on the part of the Mexicans against the army was the murder of Colonel Cross, a quartermaster, who fell into their hands on the 10th day of April, 1846. On the 24th, a detachment under Captains Thornton and Hardee fell into an ambuscade, and after fighting against great odds surrendered. War had not been declared by the United States at this time, but an excuse was at hand and the forces on both sides were ready to make their declarations by bullets. As Taylor expressed it, "the war has com-menaced and the hardest must fend off." On the 1st of May, General Taylor left Fort Brown to relieve Major Munroe at Point Isabel, who was in a measure cut off from communication with Fort Brown. Three days after the departure of General Taylor the Mexicans opened fire from their batteries against Fort Brown, and with a land fire in the rear besieged the little garrison until the 8th, while the Americans refused to accede to all demands to surrender. Meantime General Taylor having reinforced Point Isabel, had started on his return to Fort Brown, when he met a force of the enemy at Palo Alto on May 8. Here an engagement took place which continued throughout the day. On the morning of the 9th the enemy had retired to Resaca de la Pajua, where Taylor found them in a strong position. After desperate fighting on both sides the Mexicans were utterly routed, with the loss of their camp equipage and private property, including the dispatches of General Arista. On the evening of May 9 the Americans encamped outside Fort Brown and near their comrades who had held the fort. The "Declaration of War" having reached the army at about this time, General Taylor transferred his forces to the opposite side of the river and occupied Matamoras May 17, and the "invasion of Mexico" was inaugurated. Thus far, military movements had been performed by troops of the Regular Army, but a call for volunteers for one-year service had been made, and after the occupation of Matamoras such troops began to arrive. On the 19th of August General Taylor began a movement toward Monterey, taking possession of Camargo, the head of navigation on the Rio Grande. He left Cerralvo on the 13th of September and arrived at Walnut Springs, three miles from Monterey. A reconnoissance revealed a strongly fortified town occupied by ten thousand Mexicans. Taylor's encampment lay to the north and east of Monterey, and on the plain between it and near the town stood a strong fortification, called by the Americans "The Black Fort." On the north-west the city is overlooked by two hills which were strongly fortified, and on one stood a strong fortress called the "Bishop's Palace." The guns on these heights commanded the Saltillo road, which entered Monterey from the west. The river San Juan Del Monterey ran along the southern limits of the city, while on the east it was protected by detached works defended by artillery and infantry. On the afternoon of September 20, 1846, General Taylor with about six thousand men, principally volunteers, began his series of attacks against the defenses of the city, which were continued by hard fighting until the night of the 23d. Early on the following morning the Mexican general, Ampudia, asked terms for capitulation, and after some delay the strongly fortified town and its war material were surrendered to the Americans and the prisoners paroled. Taylor's troops lay at Monterey until midwinter. During the fall, detachments under Generals Wool and Worth had occupied Saltillo and Parras. In the meantime General Scott had made extensive preparations for the invasion of Mexico by way of Vera Cruz and the valley. He first proposed to capture Vera Cruz and make that place his depot of supplies. At that time it was protected, landward by a wall extending from the bay shore south of the town and encircling it to the water's edge on the north side, while on an island in the gulf, one-half mile from the city, stood a strong fortress called San Juan d' Ulloa. To carry out his plans Scott had been promised the troops thought necessary, but as they were not forthcoming, he again withdrew a part of Taylor's men, leaving him a small army of inexperienced troops. On the 22d of February, 1847, Taylor met Santa Anna at Buena Vista, and after a three-days' engagement the Mexicans were defeated by one-fifth their number.

On the 9th of March troops were landed for the investment of Vera Cruz, and on the 18th the Americans opened fire on the town. On the 27th the city asked terms and surrendered. On the 29th of March, 1847, Vera Cruz and San Juan d' Ulloa were occupied by the Americans. The victory at Vera Cruz yielded five thousand prisoners and four hundred pieces of artillery. On the 8th of April the advance division of Scott's Army of less than twelve thousand men started in the direction of the City of Mexico; the last division leaving Vera Cruz on the 13th. Fifty miles from Vera Cruz the march of the leading division was interrupted by troops under Santa Anna, who had occupied natural defenses called Cerro Gordo, and which were impregnable by direct assault. By direction of officers of the Engineer Corps, roads flanking the position of the enemy were built without the knowledge of Santa Anna, and a successful assault was made on the 18th. The surprise of the Mexicans was as complete as was the victory for the Americans. Three thousand prisoners and a large amount of artillery and ordnance stores were captured. Puebla was occupied by General Worth's Division on the 15th of May, and during the latter part of the month General Scott concentrated his army at that point. As the term of enlistment of a large part of his army would expire before the end of his campaign he chose to await reinforcements and discharge those who would leave in the midst of an advance movement. General Scott began his second march early in August, and on the 18th had arrived at a point eleven miles south of the City of Mexico. Here the Mexicans were strongly intrenched, but as at Cerro Gordo, the engineering skill of the Americans developed a course by which San Antonio was threatened, and by a flank movement Contreras, three miles to the south-west, could be carried by assault. The attack on Contreras began early on the morning of the 20th, and the position was captured within a half hour. This victory was immediately followed by the capture of Cherubusco after the severest fighting thus far in the valley of Mexico, and which permitted the Americans to approach the gates of the capital. General Scott posted his army along the slopes of the mountains south of and extending to the west of the city. An armistice was agreed upon, and General Scott with United States Commissioner Trist began negotiations for peace with Santa Anna. The terms of peace offered by the United States included the surrender of Texas by Mexico and the cession of New Mexico and California to the United States for a sum to be agreed upon afterward. These terms, being offered as the ultimatum, were so offensive to the Mexicans that they began immediate preparations for defense. Chapultepec was a strongly fortified hill west of the city. Molino Del Rey was a strongly built stone mill, several hundred feet in length, standing west of Chapultepec and over a mile from the city.

Two aqueducts entered the city from the eastern and western base of Chapultepec. These were fortified against assault, and the gates by which they entered the city were strongly fortified. On the 4th of September General Scott declared the truce ended, and on the 8th Molino Del Rey was captured with severe loss to the Americans. Chapultepec was bombarded on the 12th and carried on the 13th by two assaulting columns of two hundred and fifty men each under Captains McKenzie and Casey respectively, and in conjunction with movements made by troops against other points. Possession of the other defenses and of the entrances to the city soon followed, and the Americans entered the town on the morning of the 14th. Santa Anna had retired during the night before, after liberating some two thousand convicts, who, together with many Mexican soldiers who had disbanded themselves, kept up an annoying fire upon the Americans from housetops and other points of vantage. This warfare was kept up for twenty-four hours in spite of the city authorities and the army. Santa Anna made several attempts to retrieve the fortunes of the Mexican people, notably at Huamantla, San Jose, Puebla, Santa Isabella and Atlixia. A desultory warfare was carried on during the fall and winter by bands of Mexican Guerillas and small detachments of American troops at different points on the road from Vera Cruz to Mexico. Soon after entering the City of Mexico, the spirit of hostility which had been manifest against General Scott, by Generals Worth, Pillow and Colonel Duncan, became more marked, and they were placed under arrest, and charges of disrespect preferred against them. Counter charges were made, and, in due course, General Scott was relieved from the command by the authorities at Washington, and Pillow, Worth and Duncan were released. General Scott left Mexico immediately. The effort to destroy both Taylor and Scott, politically, together with their brilliant achievements, appeared to make them more popular. Negotiations and commissions continued throughout the winter of 1847 and 1848, resulted in a final agreement, concluded by the Mexican Congress in February, and ratified by the United States, May 25, 1848. By its terms, the Rio Grande was the acknowledged boundary between Texas and Mexico, and New Mexico and California were ceded to the United States for the sum of $15,000,000. During the month of June, Mexico was completely evacuated by the American Army.

ROLL CALL.

M. De L. Simpson, Major-General.

Esperance — Born August 28, 1824. Received his preliminary education at the Schoharie Academy, and followed by attendance at the Albany Academy. Was afterward appointed cadet at the Military Academy at West Point on the recommendation of Colonel Houck. After four years' study and discipline he graduated as second lieutenant of artillery and received the furlough usually given on graduating. He returned to duty in September, 1846, and was stationed at Governor's Island, New York. Early in December following he was ordered to Mexico, and reported to General Worth and was assigned to duty in his division at Tampico. During the greater part of his service in Mexico he was attached to the command under Captain McKenzie and was one of the volunteers composing the storming party under McKenzie which captured Chapultepec. He took part in seven engagements during the Mexican war, notably: Chapultepec, Molino Del Rey and Contreras, and returned from the service unharmed, while McKenzie and many of his comrades fell in battle. During his service in Mexico, he was promoted to first lieutenant, to adjutant and assistant quartermaster. At the close of the war he was assigned to duty at Governor's Island as assistant commissary, afterward ordered to Washington, and to Barrancas, Florida. He remained on duty at the last station for three or four years; was recalled to Washington, where he served in the Supply Department under General Gibson. While at Barrancas he was promoted to captain. From Washington he was transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, serving with General Harney, and later on accompanied that officer to Utah as purchasing agent, and subsequently returned to Washington. He was afterward ordered to San Francisco, California, as purchasing commissary to succeed Colonel Lee, and while there was made chief commissary and promoted to major, and lieutenant-colonel and colonel. He remained at San Francisco until the beginning of the war of the rebellion, when he was recalled to Washington and continued on duty in the Commissary Department until the close of the war. During the war he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, the appointment being confirmed by the Senate, and afterward raised to rank of major-general. At the close of the rebellion he was ordered to San Francisco as chief of that division. After ten years' service in that department he asked for change of station, on account of impaired health and unfavorable climate, and was transferred to the division of New York, having head-quarters in New York city for five years, and on Governor's Island for two years. He was then transferred to Chicago as chief commissary of division embracing the departments of Missouri, Dakota, The Platte and of Texas. He retained this position for about nine years and until at the age of 64, when he was placed on the retired list, August 28, 1888. Residence, Winnetka, Cook county, Illinois.

Augustus F. Lawyer, Surgeon.

Cobleskill — Aged 20 ; single ; was appointed cadet at West Point during the administration of President John Q. Adams ; commissioned assistant surgeon in the United States Navy, May 26, 1836 ; ordered to the sloop of war "Warren" and sailed to the Spanish main, coast of Mexico, March 15, 1839 ; cruised about the Gulf of Mexico, South America and the West Indies. On his return was detailed to the sloop "Pennsylvania" and afterward transferred to the frigate "Brandywine;" sailing for China, via Rio Janeiro and Bombay, with the newly-appointed minister to China—Cushing. He cruised for two years among the East Indies and along the coasts of Asia, Africa and Europe, and made during the expedition a very extensive and valuable collection of rare sea shells, precious stones and curious mementoes of the Far East, returning in 1845. During the Mexican war he served in his official duty during several engagements, notably the siege of Vera Cruz and the capture of San Juan d' Ulloa. During the bombardment of Vera Cruz he exchanged watches with the admiral commanding the fleet. The watch received has been carefully preserved and is now in the possession of Mrs. R. H. HOSPITALS.

A description of the surroundings of a hospital, during a war, requires greater diversity than does the definition of the term. Briefly a hospital was a place set apart for the medical and surgical treatment of diseases and wounds. In the field and during a battle, any convenient place beyond danger—under a tree, beside a brook, a house, church, barn, or shed—became a hospital, and was sometimes designated by a white or red flag or piece of cloth.

FIELD HOSPITALS.

Regimental hospitals were for the treatment of minor ailments and the incipient stages of more obstinate diseases and were located within the encampment of the regiment. Brigade and division hospitals were under the supervision of surgeons of a higher grade than the regimental surgeons, and were occupied by patients from the different regiments belonging to the brigade or division. A corps hospital generally existed only after a general battle and until the wounded could be transferred to permanent hospitals in the different northern cities, or placed in one general field hospital until they became able to endure transportation. The largest field hospital established during the war was known as Camp Letterman, at Gettysburg, Pa. It was located east of the town, near the railroad, and its rows of canvas houses represented a small town, inhabited by thousands of mutilated soldiers of both armies.

GENERAL HOSPITALS

were for the most part public buildings, stores or warehouses rented for the purpose by the government, and furnished with cots, baths, and all the comforts and appliances of a perfected system. A few hospitals were erected for the express purpose, in different northern cities; these were made up of "wards" or large, well-ventilated rooms, furnished with a certain number of cots, and in charge of a surgeon hired by the government. A ward master, sister of charity and nurses were his assistants.

General hospitals were for the treatment of disabled men from any part of the army, without regard to branch of service or organization. The sick or wounded most seriously disabled were treated at those general hospitals nearest the army, and if partially recovered and able to endure transportation, then were removed farther north, to make room for more serious cases which might come from the field.

OFFICERS COMMISSIONED ON ENTERING THE SERVICE.

S. Hoosic Mix, Colonel.

Schoharie — Married; aged 36; mustered as lieutenant-colonel at Washington, District of Columbia, August 16, 1861; mustered as colonel, April 26, 1862; "killed in action at Petersburg, June 15, 1864; wounded while leading his brigade in a charge in front of Petersburg, June 15, 1864, and died June 15, 1864."—M. R. Son, Frank G. Grandson, Hoosack.

Colonel Mix entered the service as a recruiting officer in July, 1861, enlisting men for a regiment of cavalry, under the patronage of — Van Allen, a wealthy New York gentleman who furnished the necessary funds. On the promotion of Van Allen to the rank of brigadier-general, the regimental title of "Van Allen Cavalry" was dropped and the organization designated "Third New York Cavalry" with Colonel Mix commanding. Subsequently and on several occasions he was offered promotion to rank as brigadier-general but declined, preferring to remain with his regiment. At the time of his death he was temporarily commanding a brigade and leading it in the charge on the enemy at Petersburg. "His body was left on the field and buried by the Rebels. No braver, better soldier ever lived, or died, than Colonel Mix."

John E. Cook, Lieutenant-Colonel.

Middleburg — Paper-maker; married; aged 33; enlisted as a private, October 1, 1861; commissioned captain, October 14, 1861; major, June 25, 1863; lieutenant-colonel, July 3, 1863; detailed on special duty on December 6th by adjutant-general of New York; rejoined his regiment at Belle Plain in March, 1863; was slightly wounded at Gettysburg, and received a severe gunshot wound in the right arm at the battle of the Wilderness, May 5, 1864, and again sustained fracture of two ribs by shell explosion at Poplar Grove Church, Va., October 7, 1864; mustered out of service by reason of expiration of term, October 15, 1864; P. O., Rutherford, N. J.; carpenter and builder; widower. One child, Mary L. Fake. Lieutenant-Colonel Cook was born in Hadley, Mass., August 25, 1829, and removed to Middleburg in 1848. Possessing some military knowledge and unlimited patriotism, he enlisted with the first to rendezvous at Cherry Valley. His ability was at once recognized and he was detailed on recruiting service. After a few days on such duty he returned with a sufficient number of volunteers to entitle him to be mustered as captain. During the occupation of Fredericksburg in 1862, by the Seventy-sixth New York, Captain Cook served as provost marshal under Major C. E. Loring, Military Governor. The just and honorable manner in which the affairs were governed by martial law under the direction of this gentleman elicited much favorable comment and praise from the "Fredericksburg Christian Banner" published at that time. Captain Cook's first battle was the 2d Bull Run, and he followed the fortunes of his regiment through all the principal battles in which it was engaged until he was mustered out of the service. After the death of Major Grover at Gettysburg he succeeded to the command of the regiment, and was complimented by Brigadier-General Cutter in his report, "for gallantry and coolness." He recovered from the wound received at the Wilderness sufficiently to rejoin his regiment before Petersburg, June 22, 1864. The wound from shell, in the side, received in October following, confined him to the hospital for a long time. Having performed the duties and assumed the responsibilities of colonel of his regiment without being permitted to assume the rank, he consented to be mustered out at the expiration of his term. After muster out he accepted an appointment under General Doubleday and was retained for several months after the close of the war. He became a resident of Rutherford, N. J., in 1876, and identified himself with Custer Post No. 17 of the G. A. R. Having passed three score years of an eventful life, he finds rest and content in the home of his daughter, the only survivor of his family.

ARTILLERY.

A regiment of artillery was a misnomer, so far as concerted action of its companies or batteries were concerned. When such organizations were maintained and recognized, the formation consisted of twelve companies, with a maximum number of one hundred and fifty men to each company, which, in artillery phrase, was called a battery. Six guns were required for the full complement of each battery, although a less number often constituted a battery. The loss of one or more guns, or of several men, did not deprive the battery of its title. Sickness or casualties in battle often reduced the working force to one hundred, and in many cases to one-half its original strength. In light artillery, where a regimental organization existed, the batteries were generally independent of each other in their movements. In the distribution of troops for field service, each division included a battery, and if it belonged to a regimental organization, its associate batteries would be scattered among three or more corps. Many companies of light artillery were organized independently, and were called independent batteries, and were distributed among the different corps of the army, as was the case with batteries of a regimental organization. Light artillery, as its name implies, followed the division of troops to which it was attached, and was essentially a marching and in some cases a flying branch of the service. Heavy artillery organizations were more permanently located in forts and established defenses, and the regiments were more consolidated. Usually the troops in such organizations were armed and drilled as infantry under preparation to resist an attack at close quarters, while the men of the light artillery, in addition to the battery guns, were each armed with a saber and revolver.

CAVALRY.

During the years 1861 and 1862, such regiments of cavalry as had taken the field were distributed in detachments, to a great extent, and served as scouting parties, mounted pickets, and head-quarter guard, and stirring up trouble for the infantry, or "dough boys" to settle. During the last years of the Rebellion this arm of the service attained greater efficiency and importance, and was organized by brigades and divisions, and operated in large bodies. It did very valuable service after it had been trained to do its fighting on foot, and its getting there on horseback. When moving by brigades or divisions in concert with other troops, or on organized raids, it was often accompanied by one or more light batteries of artillery. Each cavalryman was armed with a saber, a revolver, and a short rifle called a carbine. He wore a short dark blue jacket, trimmed in yellow, light blue pants and high boots, and after continued service became as fearless in the presence of a henroost as in charging on Early's or Rosser's troopers.

SECOND NEW YORK VETERAN CAVALRY.

Organized August, 1863, and assigned to Arnold's Division of the Nineteenth Corps. This regiment was mainly composed of men who had previously served in two years infantry regiments, and others who had been honorably discharged from the service. The regiment rendezvoused at Camp Stoneman, Washington, D. C., and was transferred to New Orleans. It took part in the Red River campaign, and in several raids through Mississippi and Alabama, in the winter of 1864 and 1865. It was engaged in one of the last skirmishes of the war at Claiborne, Miss., April 20, 1865. After peace was declared it served on provost duty, with head-quarters at Talladega, Ala., and later at Selma, Ala. It started from the latter place, for home, October 8, 1865, by way of Demapolis, Meridan, Jackson and Vicksburg, Miss., and Cairo, Indianapolis, Cleveland and Buffalo, arriving at Albany, where it was mustered out of service, November 27, 1865.

THIRD NEW YORK CAVALRY.

Organized in early fall of 1861 ; later, and in the winter and spring of 1862, was stationed at Poolesville and Monocacy,

Md., on picket duty. It accompanied Banks to Winchester and Port Royal, and after his defeat returned to Washington. A part of the regiment was included in the Union forces engaged in the Balls Bluff disaster. From Washington it was sent to Hatteras, and to Newberne, N.C., and participated in the Dahlgren raid. The regiment returned to the Shenandoah Valley in the fall of 1863, remaining until the spring of 1864, when it was assigned to the Army of the James and served around and before Richmond and Petersburg until the close of the war. During the years 1862, 1863 and 1864, several recruits joined the regiment, and after the war closed, those whose term of enlistment did not expire before November of 1865 were consolidated with unexpired term men from other organizations, and formed the regiment known as the Fourth New York Provincial Cavalry. The new organization moved from Suffolk to Portsmouth, and August 3, 1865, reached Fredericksburg, Va.; to Richmond, August 7; to Fredericksburg, August 13, and to Charlottesville, Va., August 18, where a detachment from the First Mounted Rifles was added to the battalion. The regiment reached Lynchburg, Va., on the 22d of August, and was distributed in detachments for provost duty along the railroad, from Lynchburg as far as Bristol, Tenn., with head-quarters at Abingdon, Va. On the 2d of November the battalion started for Richmond, remained at Manchester until the 12th, then to City Point, where they were mustered out, November 29, 1865, arriving at Albany, December 3. Arms and equipments were returned the day following, and on December 11, 1865, the men were paid off and discharged.

INFANTRY.

As before stated, an infantry regiment comprised ten companies, each company being designated by a letter of the alphabet. In the other branches, the companies were designated in the same manner—all dropping the letter J, or passing it over as liable to be confounded with the letter I. Each infantryman was armed with a rifle—the Springfield, Enfield or Austrian. A cross belt over the left shoulder held the cartridge box behind the right hip, and a waist belt held the bayonet scabbard at the left hip, and the cap box in front of the right hip. A haversack, or bag, containing his provisions, was slung from his right shoulder and hung at the left side, and his canteen hung and rested in the same position. A tin cup, and plate, a knife and sometimes a spoon, with one-half of a discarded canteen for a frying pan and griddle, made up the kitchen utensils of the soldier in the field. A full wardrobe of the infantryman contained a cap, overcoat, dresscoat, blouse, pants, two shirts, two pair socks, one pair shoes, woolen blanket and rubber blanket or poncho. Each article was furnished at a fixed price, and the total amount allowed per year was fixed at $42. The amount in clothing received in excess was charged to the private or non-commissioned officer and deducted from his pay. During the first two or three years of the war, the soldier clung to his possessions with considerable perseverance, and “hung to his knapsack;” but during the last campaigns, a full haversack was his first consideration, and with plenty of “grub,” a blanket and piece of “pup tent” rolled and slung from the shoulder, and forty rounds in the cartridge box and twenty in the pockets, he made war a business and put down armed rebellion. The dress coat or “sweat box” was discarded, and shoes, shirt, socks and cap, and blouse and pants were full dress for any entertainment. If he cared for cleanliness, and an opportunity offered, he scrubbed his clothes in a running stream, and sat in his skin while they were drying on a bush. The pants were light blue in color, and the blouse and dresscoat dark. The blouse was worn outside the shirt, and the same thing, deprived of its first letter, was worn inside, next to the skin. The shirt was of a charitable color and withal very hospitable, being not only a protection for the bastions and casemates of the brave volunteer, but an asylum for refugees from the conscription acts of Jefferson Davis.

When in garrison or permanent camp, the soldier slept and lived in comfortable barracks or tents, but when on a campaign, he buttoned his piece of "shelter tent" to the one carried by his chum, and sometimes a third party was "taken in" when his piece closed the back end, when the tent was pitched. When stationed in winter quarters, the small straight pines or larger trees split were converted into log huts, having an area equal to the base of the "pup tent," and of sufficient height for standing room. On top of this the tent was secured, and "joy was unconfined" when the fireplace and chimney worked well.

The veteran became a jack of all trades in architecture — carpenter, mason, plumber and decorator. With an ax as his only assistant, he erected a house which met all the requirements of his profession. If he were permitted to occupy it for a week or more, he felt proud of his invested labor. If he received "marching orders" as soon as or before his "shanty" was finished, he was ready to begin another with his original amount of capital, at the next camping place. His ingenuity was exercised to bridge over the discomforts and inconveniences of his life, to husband his health and strength, do the duties required of him, and take no thought of evil days to come. Under hardships which taxed his endurance to the utmost, like a wise philosopher, he possessed his soul with patience. When permitted to enjoy needed comforts or luxuries, he appreciated them as none but a veteran could.

RED TAPE.

After military orders had been issued by the Commander-in-Chief, and percolated through numerous reservoirs, mains and branches until the poor private received each his dose, he sometimes wished in his heart that he might become an "ossifer" — but what would he be? If he was bossed by the corporal, the corporal was bossed by the sergeant, the sergeant by the orderly, the orderly by the captain and sergeant-major, the sergeant-major by the adjutant, and the adjutant by the colonel. If he was a wise private, he minded his own business, and by so doing escaped that terrible disease so common in the army — "shoulder strap on the brain," and when he returned to civil life, the "big head."

Corporals and sergeants were armed and uniformed similar to the privates, but their official importance admitted of no farther comparison. The three parallel angles of blue worsted dress braid, called "stripes," on the arm of the sergeant, and the chevron of but two similar stripes on the arm of the corporal, made the rank between them as definite and distinctive as is the dignity between a justice of the peace and a game constable. It has been claimed that another title, below that of corporal, was created during the war, but as it has not been recognized in the Army Regulations, I cannot give it as authentic. The title referred to was "Lance Bazat," and the duties of such office were to care for the ninth corporal's dog. That such sinecure has existed, and does exist, I have no doubt, but not in the army service. From observation we can reasonably conclude that the honor is worn by garret newspaper editors who throw their camp litter at veterans who have seen active service, and who take their cue from some "gineral" commanding the soft bread brigade.

Attached to each regiment of infantry was a drum and fife corps, or in some cases a brass band, composed of men who enlisted for such purpose. In the cavalry, one hand and a pair of lungs gave the troopers their inspiration, from a bugle. It is recorded of at least one brass band in the cavalry service. The service required of a regimental band were to play the reveille, the tattoo, and to "chasse" up and down the line behind that drum major at "dress parade." Each regiment was also afflicted with a bugler, whose life was protected by the patronage of the colonel, and who was apparently created for the express purpose of finishing the work left incomplete by bullets of the enemy, and disease. He was the regimental rooster who started the fool chickens of the band, cackling and scratching at daybreak. He usually finished his crowing and took refuge before the tired victims of his torture could fully realize that they had "awaked with the rich man." Although his first labor of the day was brief, it sufficed to transform a slumbering multitude into a tumultuous and angry mob. The fifers and sheepskin whackers, under the plea of regulations, came tumbling out in frantic haste to arouse the latest sleeper. While they were laboring with might and main to create the greatest amount of noise within the time allotted them, an orderly sergeant appeared in each company street with a pair of lungs seeking promotion, yelling, "Fall in for roll call!" Soon the brave boys in blue or something else were in line, confronting their last tormentor, and after a brief conflict of wordy warfare with the man of the book and pencil, they found they were still there, and clapped their hands in joy over a present deliverance.

GUARD AND PICKET.

While a regiment was in the field and encamped, a certain number of men were chosen or detailed in "turn" to guard the property of the regiment, maintain order, and arrest persons violating the camp rules. Each post requiring a guard was numbered, and each guard or sentry was required to remain on watch for two hours at a time. While encamped in the enemy's country, another system of guard duty was employed in addition to the regular camp guard, called "picket." For this duty a regiment or part of regiment from each brigade was selected to form a portion of a line of outposts, composed of detachments from other brigades and divisions, which was established far enough in advance of the encamped troops to afford timely warning for preparation to meet an enemy too strong for the picket line to oppose. The force detailed from a regiment for picket was commanded by a commissioned officer, and the head-quarters was called the "grand reserve." From this place a certain number, called the "reserve," were sent forward to a certain distance toward the picket line, and from this reserve, detachments of six men and a corporal were sent forward a certain distance farther, and to the right and left, and were called "outposts." From each outpost, two men were stationed still farther in advance, and within sight and hail of each other, and with orders to arrest and detain any person approaching his line, and to fire his gun on the approach of an armed body of the enemy, and to retreat to the outpost — the outpost retreating to the reserve, and the reserve to the grand reserve.

The men composing the outpost were to remain out six hours, giving each private two hours on the picket line, when they were relieved by six others, and retired to the reserve. When the enemy were known to be in the immediate front, the system was less complicated. The pickets or "videttes" being posted direct from the grand reserve or regiment, and in case of an attack were to rally on the grand reserve. During the first years of the rebellion, picket duty at the front became a test of courage as well as of endurance. During the long lonely hours of watching, the vigilance of the picket could not be relaxed for a moment, and at such times the safety of an army depended upon the "eternal vigilance" of "a private or two." During the night-time, the officer commanding the whole picket line made a "tour of inspection" of all outposts and reserves. On such tours he was known as "Grand Rounds," and in the day-time by the title of "Officer of the Day."

REGIMENTAL COLORS.

Each regiment was provided with two flags, called the "colors."

One the National flag, the other the "State flag," bearing the coat of arms of the State to which the regiment belonged, together with the name of the State and number of the regiment. The "colors" were carried and guarded by a "color guard," composed of two sergeants and six corporals. Division commanders were accompanied with an escort or staff, which included a bearer of the head-quarters' flag, which differed entirely from regimental flags, and bore only the design of the corps badge, and the color of the division. As each corps was divided into three divisions, the number of the division was shown by the color of the badge of the corps to which it belonged. Red, First Division; white, Second Division; blue, Third Division. These division badges were attached to nearly every thing belonging to the army, except to the heels of the mules. The private wore it on the center of the crown of his cap, in addition to the letter of his company, and the number of his regiment, and if he strayed from home or was caught killing sheep, his owner could be notified. The veteran reader will not suppose that I have submitted the foregoing for his enlightenment and instruction, but for the benefit of the young readers and those not initiated in army regulations.

FIRST NEW YORK ENGINEERS.

The regiment was organized in September, 1861. The services of the regiments of engineers were more contributory to the movements of the army than aiding or supporting it in battle. The First New York Engineers was not attached to any particular corps or division, but like the Fifteenth, was called to service as builders and repairers wherever bridges were required or the skill of artificers was in demand. The regiment re-enlisted and served through the war, the men on record here being recruits.

* Abridged from Lieut. A. P. Smith's History of the Regiment.

for Acquia Creek, and from that place marched to Fredericksburg, arriving on the night of the 25th; here the Seventy-sixth was assigned to Doubleday's Division and detailed for guard and provost duty at that city, and being the only troops occupying the city from June 10 to June 26; by special order of June 26 it was assigned to Doubleday's Brigade, King's Division, McDowell's Third Corps; on the 2d of July, Colonel William P. Wainwright assumed command of the regiment and began its drill and equipment for effective service; on the morning of the 9th of August King's Division proceeded to Culpeper, under orders to join the First Corps at that place; it encamped midway between Culpeper and Cedar Mountain on the 11th, and on the 16th passed over the battle-field of Cedar Mountain and encamped at its base; retracing its steps on the 19th, the Seventy-sixth proceeded to near the Rappahannock and encamped in a position overlooking Banks' Corps; on the 21st day of August, 1862, the Seventy-sixth New York received its baptism of fire while passing to the support of a battery; August 23 it bivouacked two miles beyond Warrenton Junction, resumed the march to White Sulphur Springs, and on the 28th continued the march toward Washington; after passing a mile or two beyond Gainesville, the regiment was assailed by a terrible artillery fire from the left, under which it rallied, and after reaching the farther side of a piece of woods, a short distance in advance, it engaged the enemy until after dark; in the desperate and fruitless battle of Gainesville all wounded, who could not be taken from the field in ambulances, fell into the hands of the enemy on the following day; those wounded during the engagement were, at times, under the fire of both armies, and after the battle suffered untold torture from hunger, thirst and pain for four days, and at the end from a drenching rain; six days after the battle the wounded able to walk, started for Centerville, where they were paroled; at one o'clock of the 29th of August, the Seventy-sixth fell back toward Manassas Junction, and after a few hours' rest, continued the march to Bull Run, where it took position on a low hill in advance of the main army, and from which it was compelled to retire after dark, after a loss of fifteen killed and twenty-four missing; on the following morning an "assembly" of the brigade revealed the fact that but one-third were present for duty, after a campaign of twenty days; on this day, the 30th, the regiment lay in reserve under artillery fire, but was not actively engaged, and later, continued with the army in retreat to near Centerville; the march to Fairfax was resumed on the afternoon of September 1, and after reaching camp the Seventy-sixth was detailed for picket, four miles to the left, where they watched and waited for the enemy, in a cold north-west storm; the retreat was continued on the morning of the 2d as far as Upton's Hill, and thus closed the first campaign of the Seventy-sixth.

When the regiment left Fredericksburg on this campaign it numbered four hundred and fifty officers and men. On the morning of the 2d of September it numbered two hundred and twenty-five, or one-half. After a rest of four days it started on the Antietam campaign; passing through Washington, their old quarters on Meridan Hill, Frederick City, Middletown and to South Mountain, where it was assigned a position in Hooker's Corps, and in the assault to the right of Turner's Gap. On reaching the summit of the mountain, it became engaged with the enemy and continued the fight until dark. During the fore part of the next day — the 17th, — the Seventy-sixth lay between the artillery of both armies, suffering a loss of several wounded, and in the afternoon was withdrawn to the support of a battery. Darkness closed the terrible battle of Antietam. The dawn of the 18th revealed only dead and wounded foes. After a much-needed rest at Antietam, until the 24th of October, the regiment turned its face toward Virginia and started on the march to Bakersville, to Crampton's Gap, to Berlin, to Snicker's Gap and to Union, where the brigade joined its division, November 3, and marched to Warrenton Junction. Here McClellan was relieved, and Burnside took chief command of the Army of the Potomac; and here the Seventy-sixth encountered its first snow storm during its service in the field — a regular norther. From Warrenton the regiment marched to Fayetteville, and after a halt of four days started for Falmouth — encamping for one night on the same ground at Brooks' Station, where it had bivouacked just six months previous, on its way to Fredericksburg. From Brooks' Station, the regiment was sent to Acquia Creek for guard duty, and later on to the vicinity of Fredericksburg. On the afternoon of the 12th of December, the brigade crossed the Rappahannock, three miles below Fredericksburg. On the 13th, it joined its division and marched to the attack. Being exposed to a heavy artillery fire during the entire day the Seventy-sixth suffered a loss of eleven privates killed and wounded out of one hundred and twelve who went into action at the battle of Fredericksburg. A few days after recrossing the river the regiment marched to the Potomac, where it went into quarters at Belle Plain. It was recalled on January 20, 1863, to take part in the second failure before Fredericksburg. Returning to its old quarters, it remained in permanent camp until the 28th of April, when it started on the Chancellorsville campaign. At a point four miles below Fredericksburg, it assisted in laying a pontoon bridge, and crossed the river at that place. At daylight an artillery duel began and continued for some time. Early on the next morning, after advancing under a dense fog, the boys found the enemy in heavy force. Unable to advance or retreat they lay during the day, protected by slightly rising ground, until dark, when they rejoined their corps. On May 1, they recrossed the river and proceeded to United States Ford, crossed the river at daylight of May 2, arrived on the battle-field of Chancellorsville at six o'clock, and remained with the forces resisting the Rebel attacks until the retreat of the Union Army to the north bank of the Rappahannock.

After going into pleasant quarters near Falmouth, the regiment received about fifty men from the Twenty-fourth New York, and later on an additional number, of five officers and two hundred and fifty men, from the Thirtieth New York. On the 12th of June the Seventy-sixth received marching orders while on the picket line, and on the following morning it was on the road to Gettysburg. It arrived at Centerville on the 16th, Goose Creek on the 19th, crossed the Potomac at Edwards Ferry on the 25th, and marched to Barnesville, Md. It reached Jefferson on the 26th, South Mountain on the 27th, Frederick City the 28th, Emmitsburg the 29th, and on the 30th moved to a creek on the boundary line between Maryland and Pennsylvania. On the morning of July 1, the Seventy-sixth, as the advance regiment of the First Corps, resumed the march, and before noon saw the now historical village of Gettysburg. It met the enemy at Seminary Ridge, and after seven hours of unequal contest, the troops of the First Corps were compelled to retreat to higher ground south of the village. During a half hour in which the regiment was most actively engaged, its loss in killed and wounded numbered eighteen officers and one hundred and fifty-one men. On the eve of July 2 the brigade was sent to assist the Twelfth Corps in repulsing a charge of the enemy. On the 6th and 7th of July the Union Army was in pursuit of Lee. The Seventy-sixth made its third journey toward Virginia by way of Middletown and South Mountain and crossed the Potomac by the same route taken after the battle of Antietam. It reached Middleburg, Va., on the 20th, numbering eighty officers and men present for duty. On the 22d the regiment moved to White Plains; to Warrenton on the 23d, and to Beverly Ford, August 1, where it remained on picket duty until September 16.

On the 12th of September two hundred and fifty conscripts were assigned to the regiment, and another addition of one hundred and fifty men was made on the 21st. September 24 the regiment removed to Raccoon Ford on the Rapidan. Here another addition of one hundred men was received into the regiment. During the month following, the recruits and few remaining veterans belonging to the Seventy-sixth played a very busy game of "tag," stopping at near Culpeper, Kelley's Ford, Bristoe Station, Centerville, Haymarket, Thoroughfare Gap, back to Gainesville and Bristoe Station, where they encamped until November 5. On that day they started over another circuit,—preaching at Catlett's Station, Rappahannock Station, Ely's Ford and Chancellorsville. Failing to proselyte the Johnnies at Mine Run, they began a retreat with Meade's Army on the afternoon of December 1 by way of Germania Ford, Stevensburg and Kelley's Ford.

They remained at the latter place until the 24th of December, and then moved to Culpeper and remained until the 6th of February. While in winter quarters the number of veteran members of the Seventy-sixth was increased by convalescents from hospitals and detached duty men to one hundred and seventy-five, of which number about one hundred re-enlisted and received their veteran furlough. During this time, also, the regiment was presented a new flag, by the ladies of Cherry Valley, to replace the old one which had become torn and riddled by the shot and shell of eleven different battles. On the 6th of February, 1864, the regiment engaged in a skirmish with the enemy at Raccoon Ford, on the Rapidan, and returned to their winter quarters. In the reorganization of the army in March, the Seventy-sixth became part of the Second Brigade, Third Division of the Fifth Army Corps, under General Warren. On the 4th day of May, the Second Brigade broke camp and advanced toward the Wilderness by way of Germania Ford, Wilderness Tavern, and met the enemy in force near Parker's store. During this engagement three companies, B, F and K, under Major Young, as skirmishers, were cut off, and a greater part of them captured; the balance of the regiment was actively engaged until the third day of the battle, when with its brigade it moved to the Lacy House, and from there to Todd's Tavern, where it arrived on the morning of May 8, and met the enemy on the same day at Laurel Hill. Unsuccessful attacks were made on the 10th, 11th and 12th, after which the brigade removed to a new position. After the battles around Spottsylvania it followed the general flank movement of the army, by way of Balls Church, Jericho Bridge, Quarle's Mills, Mongoluck, Hanover Town and near Totopotomoy creek, where it formed in line of battle on the plantation once owned by Patrick Henry, and holding the ground against the enemy until the forenoon of May 31, when it was relieved by the brigade of General Bartlett. On the 6th of June it arrived at Cold Harbor, on the 7th at near Sumner's Bridge, on the Chickahominy, on the 13th at Long Bridge and Wilcox Landing, on the James river; crossing the James three miles below Windmill Point, it continued the march toward Petersburg and assaulted the enemy's works on the afternoon of the 18th; after the repulse, defenses were thrown up and the troops were allowed to rest until the 18th of August, when the regiment moved to the "Yellow House" on the Weldon railroad, when it engaged the enemy for three days; on the 27th of October the regiment moved toward Hatcher's Run, and encamped in pleasant quarters; on December 7th the Third Brigade, with two companies of the Seventy-sixth, moved out on what is known as the "Hicksford Raid;" December 18 the Seventy-sixth New York comprised two commissioned officers and one hundred and eighty-four non-commissioned officers and privates, and was consolidated with the One Hundred and Forty-seventh New York, by order of the Secretary of War, December 31, 1864, the order reaching the regiment in January of 1865. The last report of the Seventy-sixth New York was made on the 15th day of January, 1865, and here we leave the chronicler, while the remaining men of a gallant and expended regiment continue on their way, under a new title, to be "in at the death" of the Confederacy. Prominent engagements of the Seventy-sixth New York: Gainesville, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Laurel Hill, Weldon railroad. Fox's Losses gives its total enrollment as one thousand four hundred and ninety-one; died in Rebel prisons, fifty-one.

NINETY-FIRST NEW YORK INFANTRY.

Was organized in the fall of 1861, with head-quarters at Albany, N. Y. It left that city on the 20th day of December, and landed at Governor's Island, New York, and embarked from that place on the steamer "Ericsson," for Key West, Fla. The regiment remained at Key West on garrison duty until May 20, when it embarked on the steamer "Philadelphia" for Pensacola. From Pensacola it was transferred to New Orleans, and afterward to Baton Rouge and Bayou Teche. Served in the Teche country under General Wetzel until May of 1863, when it joined the Union forces in the siege of Port Hudson. After the surrender of that place in July, the regiment returned to Donaldsonville, where it took a hand in sending Dick Taylor to the "right about." Returned to Camp Parapet, and from there to Brashear City, where it remained through the winter of 1863 and 1864. On the 1st of December about two-thirds of the regiment re-enlisted. In May, 1864, the regiment was sent to Fort Jackson below New Orleans, and remained until July 12, when those members who had re-enlisted came home on veteran furlough via Cairo, Ill. At the expiration of their furlough they reported at Albany and were ordered to Fort McHenry, Baltimore. During the months of August, September and October, a large number of recruits were enrolled for the regiment. The regiment remained at Fort McHenry until February 8, 1865, when all but Company E embarked by steamer for City Point, and became a part of the army under General Grant, and participated in the battles of Gravelly Run, Five Forks and South Side railroad. As an organization, it was discharged from the United States service, June 10, 1865, and its members were mustered out a few weeks later at Albany. But few men from Schoharie county enlisted at the organization of the regiment in 1861, but under the calls of 1864 a large number were enrolled, notably in Company B. Colonel Fox gives the total deaths in the regiment as two hundred and ninety-eight, of which number one hundred and thirteen were killed or died of wounds.

ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND NEW YORK VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

The rendezvous of this regiment was established at "Quarantine Grounds," Staten Island, and afterward removed to "Camp Hill-house," Long Island. It was mustered into the United States service, December 20, 1861, and accredited as a New York city regiment, although many of its members were residents of different parts of the State. On arriving at Washington it was stationed, first, at Meridan Hill and afterward at Carver Barracks, remaining at either place but a short time, then removing to Fort Carroll, where it remained until May, 1862. At the time McClellan evacuated Yorktown, and started on the Peninsula campaign, the One Hundred and Second was sent to Aquia Creek, and in the latter part of May it was transferred as part of the forces to reinforce Banks at Harper's Ferry. At that place the regiment assisted in hauling heavy guns into position on "Maryland Heights," for the purpose of supplying Stonewall Jackson with "dinner kettles." The regiment remained under Banks until after the battle of Chantilly; it took part in all the movements of Geary's Division, Twelfth Corps of the Army of the Potomac, until that corps was transferred to Chattanooga, Tenn. It took part in the battle of Wauhatchie, in which the Union troops were victorious, and as a result, communication became possible to the starving troops of Thomas at Chattanooga. In the spring of 1864 the One Hundred and Second became part of the Second Division of the Twentieth Corps, which had been formed by consolidating the Eleventh and Twelfth, and took part in all the ups and downs—principally ups—of that corps, under Sherman, through Georgia, to Atlanta, to Savannah, through the Carolinas, and after the surrender of Johnson, to Washington, terminating a picnic of three years and four months in the Grand Review. In the winter of 1863 and 1864, while the regiment lay at Raccoon Mountain, the members re-enlisted as veteran volunteers, with but three or four exceptions. The One Hundred and Second was mustered out of the United States service at Arlington Heights, Va., July 24, 1865, having been in the service three years, seven months and four days. From Arlington Heights the regiment returned to New York city, where the men were paid off and discharged. During its service it bore a part in the following engagements:

Harper's Ferry, May 25, 1862; Cedar Mountain, Va., August 9, 1862 (in this engagement the One Hundred and Second suffered a loss of over fifty per cent of the number engaged); White Sulphur Spa, Va., August 24, 1862; Chantilly, Va., September 1, 1862; Antietam, Md., September 17, 1862; Hillsborough, Va., October 21, 1862; Berryville, Va., December 2, 1862; Wolf Run Shoals, December 28, 1862; Ocquacan, Va., January, 1863; Chancellorsville, May 2-3, 1863; Gettysburg, Pa., July 2-3, 1863; Wauhatchie, Tenn., October 29, 1863; Lookout Mountain, November 25, 1863; Pumpkin Vine Creek, Ga., November 26, 1863; Ringold, Ga., November 27, 1863; Rocky Face Ridge, Ga., May, 1864; Resaca, Ga., May 15, 1864 (in this engagement the One Hundred and Second captured four guns); Dallas, Ga., May 18, 1864; Lost Mountain, June 1 and 10, 1864; Pine Knob, Ga., June 13 and 20, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, Ga., June 27, 1864; Peach Tree Creek, Ga., July 20, 1864; Siege of Atlanta, July and August, 1864; Savannah, Ga., December, 1864; Bentonville, N. C., March 21, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH NEW YORK INFANTRY.

Raised from the counties of Saratoga, Montgomery, Fulton and Hamilton, with rendezvous at Fonda, N. Y., from which place it started for the seat of war, August 29, 1862; received its arms and equipments at Sandy Hook, Md. It was one of the regiments captured by Lee at Harper's Ferry at the time of his invasion of Maryland in 1862. After parole it was ordered to Chicago to await exchange. During 1863 it was stationed at Hilton Head and Beaufort, S. C. From early February to April 15, 1864, it served in Florida, where it incurred a heavy loss at the battle of Olustee. On the 15th of April it sailed with the Tenth Corps for Virginia, where it joined the Army of the James. During the battle of Cold Harbor the One Hundred and Fifteenth was temporarily attached to the Eighteenth Army Corps. In the engagement at Darbytown Road it sustained its heaviest loss from a volley of musketry fired by the Ninth Maine through a mistake, and at Fort Fisher much of its loss was incurred by an explosion of the magazine on the day after the fort was captured ; mustered out June 17, 1865. Engagements: Harper's Ferry, Olustee, Lake City, Fla., Chesterfield Heights, Va., Drewry's Bluff, Proctor's Creek, Bermuda Hundred, Cold Harbor, Siege of Petersburg, Deep Bottom, Chapin's Farm, Darbytown Road, Fort Fisher.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEER
INFANTRY.

This regiment was raised under the call of July, 1862. It was at first proposed to recruit a regiment from Schoharie and Delaware, but for some cause the plan was abandoned — Delaware raising a regiment within her own county, and Schoharie uniting with Montgomery. The first enrollments were made during the last days of July. During the latter part of August, Companies A and B arrived from Schenectady, and "Camp Vedder" was established on what is now the "Fair Grounds," at Schoharie. Tents and barracks were provided, a few guns were furnished to familiarize "the brave volunteer who fought without fear," and ate his grub when he got it, with the symptoms of war. The men were arranged in strings and bunches for the market, and drilled in right and left-legged mysteries. The surgeon soon put his tactics into practice, and before the middle of September a large number of the men had become familiar with the infantry quickstep and the cavalry trot. Enrollments continued until about the 20th of September, when most of the companies had attained their maximum number, and from such companies a few were transferred to such companies as had not attained their minimum number. Of the ten companies, five—Companies C, D, E, G and I—were raised from Schoharie. A few Montgomery county men were transferred to Company I and a few Schoharie county men were enrolled in Companies A, H, and K. Factional fights occurred between Frog Alley delegates and “Hayseeds” from Broome, Blenheim and Fulton, the former clan getting licked and jugged on each occasion. The regiment was mustered into the United States service, September 22, 1862, and on the day following passed through Albany, reaching New York city on the morning of the 26th, where it was quartered at Park Barracks. About thirty members of the regiment were left behind in hospital at Schoharie, joining their comrades in the field during the months of October, November and December following. After reaching Park Barracks, the boys were presented their Belgian rifles and military fixings. This rifle had the capacity to pump lead at the rate of one ounce per pump, and when it received its sabre bayonet extension, became more terrifying in appearance than the puny warrior who handled it. The bayonet of this gun had two prominent uses, the hilt making an admirable coffee and hard tack grinder; and when carried in its scabbard on a drill or march, could trip and throw the careless son with a gun, nine times out of a possible ten. After a stay in New York of nearly two days the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth departed for Washington, breakfasting at the renowned “Cooper Shop” or Soldiers’ Rest in Philadelphia, spending a night in Baltimore, and the night following in Washington. The next morning it crossed the Potomac to Arlington Heights, where it remained for a few days, and was then moved to Fairfax under command of Lieutenant-Colonel De Agreda. Inasmuch as I shall only attempt to place on record such facts as can be compassed by a description, I will not try to set down the sum of atrocities committed against the rank and file of the Union Army during the war by official authority of whisky, shoulder strap on the brain, and other maladies of a morbid ambition.

The month of October and part of November was spent at Fairfax in drill, picket and guard duty. While here Colonel De Agreda resigned and Charles R. Coster was appointed colonel, and at a later date Allen H. Jackson lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. In the month of November the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth having been assigned to the Second Division of the Eleventh Corps, marched with its division to Thoroughfare Gap on a reconnoissance, and after a stay of two or three days returned to near Germantown, Va., and encamped until December 8. On that day the Eleventh Corps, being the reserve of the Army of the Potomac, started for Fredericksburg, with five days' rations. Beginning the march with snow at a depth of from three to six inches, and continuing through unlimited mud, on the afternoon of the 11th the ears of the weary men were greeted with the boom of artillery from Fredericksburg, as they reached the heights south of Dumfries. On the day following, after a rapid march, the regiment encamped about noon, exhausted and weak from lack of food. After a night's rest, and receiving a day's rations, the boys resumed the march on the afternoon of the 13th. From elevated ground on the route the smoke of the battle of Fredericksburg became visible. Two days later the regiment went into camp to the rear of Falmouth, where it remained until the afternoon of January 20, 1862, when it played its part in the drama of "Stuck in the Mud," by marching to a point several miles below Fredericksburg on the Rappahannock. Already drenched with a drizzling rain, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth sought rest on "downy beds" of clay and scrub oak, at 9 P. M., to be aroused at 5 A. M., and to find that the watery elements had interposed for peace for the present. Three days later the regiment reached its old quarters at Falmouth, to resume its old duties of picket, guard and drill. Camp life at Falmouth is not remembered by the boys of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth as a pleasant experience. Beginning after a seven days' march at the commencement of a Virginia winter and continuing until early in February, without sufficient shelter to protect them from the cold and storms, the bitter memories of quinine, calomel and the dead march, still linger around the name of Falmouth. On January 12, 1863, the regiment exchanged the Belgian rifle for the Enfield. On the 5th day of February, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth started on another constitutional, and after two days of snow, rain and mud, encamped near Stafford C. H., remaining until February 21, when it moved to Hope Landing on Aquia creek. At this place guard, drill, picket, and fatigue duty occupied the business hours of the regiment until the 17th of April, when it removed to Brooks' Station on the Aquia and Fredericksburg railroad. It remained at that place until April 27, when it started on the Chancellorsville campaign by way of Kelley's Ford, Germania Ford, and to the right wing of Hooker's Army near the Culpeper and Fredericksburg plankroad, and reaching that position on the night of April 30. May 1 and the forenoon of the 2d was spent in waiting, watching and countermarching, without being brought into collision with the enemy. On the afternoon of the 2d, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth with a part of its brigade were sent on a reconnoissance into the wilderness in "light marching order," leaving their knapsacks and camp equipage under guard at their position in the Union lines. Many of the owners never saw their Saratogas again, and a few not until two years later, when they passed by the mouldered remnants on their way to the Grand Review, and had nearly encircled the Confederacy, under Sherman.

During the absence of the regiment, the Rebel Jackson made his noted assault on the Union right, and while the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth continued its advance into the wilderness, and the men consoling themselves with, "we're licking them back there," Howard was fleeing with his demoralized followers toward Chancellorsville. Any honors conveyed by the title "the flying half moon," belong to O. O. Howard. Any wide awake private belonging to the Eleventh Corps knew that Rebel troops had been moving past their front and cutting trees in the wilderness for twenty-four hours previous to the attack. Darkness found the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth far into the wilderness, and with but one avenue of escape. By cautiously countermarching for some time and then filing to the right, it succeeded in reaching the forces who were holding Jackson at bay, and at about the time that popular Rebel received his death warrant. He had sufficient hardihood to parade himself as a chosen servant of God, and a defender of human bondage, but always lacked courage to attack an equal force in open fight. After joining the army, the regiment lay behind one of the Union batteries until the approach of day, when it followed the general movement to the left and below the Chancellor House. The historic "Chancellorsville" consisted only of a commodious brick Virginia house, and at the time of the battle was occupied by Mrs. Chancellor and her daughter. During the 3d, 4th and 5th of May the regiment occupied various positions in the rear of the Union lines, and slept on their arms, the night of the 5th being passed in a drizzling rain without shelter. At daybreak on the 6th, and during a dense fog it crossed the Rappahannock at United States Ford, and was soon on its way to the hills of Stafford, where it went into camp, May 7. From May 7 until June 12, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth lay in a beautiful pine grove near Stafford C. H., drilling and performing its share of picket duty. On the afternoon of the 12th of June it broke camp and marched to near Hartwood Church ; on the 13th to Catlett's Station ; on the 14th it crossed the Plains of Manassas and encamped at 9 P. M. on the Bull Run, and on the morning following marched to Centerville. During these three days the regiment suffered severely from heat, lack of water, and fatigue incident to rapid marching. The regiment left Centerville on the morning of the 17th, and after a forced march, halted at 3 P. M. on Goose creek, where it lay until noon of the 24th, and then marched to Edwards Ferry on the Potomac. At half-past six of the morning of June 25, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth began its march into Maryland, and by way of Poolesville, Monocacy Aqueduct, and Doub's Station, reached Jefferson village at 9:30 P. M., after a severe march of thirty miles. On the following day it moved to the foot of South Mountain, remaining until the evening of the 28th, when it moved east of and beyond Frederick city and encamped at 9 o'clock.

On the morning of the 29th the regiment continued its pilgrimage through rain and mud to Emmittsburg, and on the eve of the day following removed to a new position two miles beyond. At eight A. M. of July 1, 1863, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth started for Gettysburg in a misty rain and over a tiresome road. It approached the town by the Tennally Town Road, and near its junction with the Emmittsburg Pike, made a detour through the cemetery, and reached Baltimore street by the cemetery gates. It halted for rest on the left side of the street and on the line on which the street fence of the National Cemetery has since been erected. From this position and overlooking the town, the conflict between the First Corps and the enemy could be seen. The men were ordered to rest and to put their wet guns in order. Let history be true in this case. Many of them failed to remove the moisture from the tubes of their guns, so that when they were suddenly brought to close quarters with an overwhelming foe, with empty guns, they had no time to remedy the fault and were slaughtered. At 4 P. M., the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth in advance, the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth New York and Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania of the First Brigade, Steinwehr's Second Division, under acting Brigadier-General Coster, were ordered forward through the town at a double-quick. Reaching its northern limits, the brigade filed to the right and east beyond the "Brickyard" and took position between Stevens' Run and the Harrisburg road and facing north-east. Here they were met by Hoke's North Carolinians of Early's Division, who poured a destructive fire into the little brigade. Being overpowered from the front and endangered from the right, those not disabled and choosing death rather than capture, retreated toward the town, leaving a trail of dead and wounded. During the brief period of about twenty minutes during which the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth was under fire, it lost in killed, wounded and captured, two hundred and fifty men, the dead and most of the wounded remaining in the hands of the enemy until the morning of the 4th, and after the retreat of Lee. A few escaped capture by concealment within the town, and a few by strategy after capture. Between thirty and forty of those captured were hurried to Richmond and confined in Belle Isle, where six of the number afterward died, while those remaining and not paroled were removed to Andersonville early in the year following. Of the number captured at Gettysburg and confined in Rebel prisons one-half died in captivity.

The remnant of the regiment, with the decimated One Hundred and Fifty-fourth and Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania retreated to "Cemetery Hill," and was assigned to a position on the western slope of the cemetery, bordering the Tennally Town Road near its junction with the Emmittsburg Pike. Here it was rejoined by those who had become separated in the retreat or had escaped from the enemy, and here it remained behind the boulder fence and tombstones of the cemetery during the second and third days of the battle. After Lee's retreat from Gettysburg, the regiment started in the tardy pursuit with the forces under Meade, and after marching a short distance south of the Potomac, was ordered to Alexandria, where it performed gnard duty in escorting conscripts, deserters, and recruits to the front. On the arrival of the regiment at Alexandria the number of officers and men present for duty did not exceed one hundred and fifty. Quite a number who had been slightly wounded, and who had been discharged from hospitals rejoined their regiment soon after. Colonel Coster was detailed on recruiting service at New York city, but resigned soon afterward, the command of the regiment devolving upon Lieutenant-Colonel Jackson, who remained its commander until the close of the war.

During the stay at Alexandria most of the companies were temporarily consolidated by placing two companies under one captain and one orderly sergeant. While here the boys enjoyed one of their

brief picnics, which always followed or preceded seasons of hardships and suffering. About the last of September the regiment marched to Washington, and as part of the Twelfth and Eleventh Corps under Hooker, were packed inside and on top of box cars, and started on the long journey for Bridgeport, Ala. When about eight miles from Washington the hind truck of the car preceding the one occupied by Company C left the track, causing the car following to jump the track and roll over and over, down a steep embankment. Those on top were obliged to jump, and many of them were severely injured, while those inside were more fortunate. After the wreck was cleared up and the injured cared for, the journey was continued by way of Harper's Ferry, Cincinnati and Nashville. While passing through Ohio the boys received many bountiful lunches, spread out by the citizens at various stopping places, and while passing along, hundreds of little lunch parcels, accompanied by a letter and request to reply, were thrown to the top of and into the open doors of the cars by the Union-loving girls of Ohio. No doubt many family altars were set up in after years by the boy in blue who ate the dainty lunch, and the Buckeye girl who prepared it. The long journey westward became too monotonous to allow an opportunity for fun to pass unimproved. In those railroad days the water tanks standing by the side of the track were manipulated by pulling a rope when the fireman wished to replenish his boiler. Through a desire for revenge on their comrades sheltered within the car and for mischief generally, the "roosters" were not slow to discover an admirable plan to gratify their wishes by pulling the rope as the train passed a tank, and thus sending a six-inch stream of water against the side and into the open doors of the cars. No record has been left of the precise form of language used by those sitting opposite those doorways. This pastime came near a fatal termination on one occasion. After the rope had been released, in swaying back toward its place, it became entangled around the neck of Hiram Gage of Company C, and before released he was dragged to the third car. The injury to his neck was quite painful for some time. Previous to this accident he had been one of the inside passengers and had made the transfer to the top to escape drenchings. The journey by rail continued to a safe termination at Bridgeport, Ala., and within twenty-eight miles of Chattanooga.

Here the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth remained for three or four weeks, awaiting the arrival of the balance of the corps, and performing such fatigue and other duty as is incident to a supply depot. At that time the Army of Rosenerans lay "cooped up" in Chattanooga, and by the time the balance of the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps, with Sherman's Army from the West, had reached Bridgeport, it had nearly reached the point of starvation. On the 26th of October the regiment, with its division, crossed the Tennessee and began its march in the direction of Chattanooga, encamping for the night at Whiteside. Early on the following morning the march was continued, and at 9 A. M. the boys of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth beheld the now historical Lookout Mountain, and the signal flags of the enemy giving warning of trouble to come. The regiment led the advance of Hooker's Army at this time, and passed around the base of the mountain through open country and into woods, behind a strong skirmish line, from which it emerged into open country and in full view of the beleaguered troops of Thomas, who held a position on Raccoon Mountain. In making the detour of the base of "Lookout" one picket line of the enemy was driven up the mountain and one near the river captured. On the evening of the 28th, the Rebels came down the mountain to drive the tired tramps of Geary's Division from their doorsteps, but the Yanks awoke in ill humor. When the Johnnies began building breastworks the Second Division of the Eleventh Corps got mad too, the Second Brigade charging on them in the darkness and driving the Rebels back to their bunks in the attic. Here the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth met their old foe of Gettysburg, but this time it was Longstreet's men who retreated. After the battle of Wauhatchie, the regiment rested until the arrival of Sherman's Army, when it took a prominent part in the capture of Missionary Ridge and the subsequent movements which resulted in driving Hood and Bragg from Tennessee. Previous to the battles around Chattanooga and after the battle of Wauhatchie, Longstreet had been sent to lay siege to Burnside at Knoxville, whose situation had become so critical, that on November 27 the Eleventh Corps, under Howard, and Sherman's Fifteenth Corps were sent to his relief. The experiences of the march to the relief of Knoxville will be remembered by the surviving members of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, who performed that journey, as the severest of their whole army life.

Through rain and mud alternated with frost and rough roads, and at a pace which taxed the endurance of the men to the utmost, they arrived at a point on the Tennessee seventy-three miles from Chattanooga, in time to capture one of Longstreet's supply trains loaded with flour. The cars were broken open, and each of the captors "drew," scooped and distributed without restriction. Building pancakes followed, and when they became a drug, the boys sought to exchange their surplus flour with the natives for other articles of food, but they said it looked like "sick" flour and refused to barter. The rebellion which took place in the stomachs of the boys during the next day, on resuming their march, gave them practical knowledge of the unfitness of flour made from "sick" wheat as a staff of life. From London, the "flour city," the regiment made a two days' march to a point within seven miles of Knoxville, where they learned that Longstreet had raised the siege and had gone. The men who had marched to the relief of Burnside were fast becoming barefoot, and sadly in need of clothing to protect them from the December storms, while the defenders of Knoxville were in a plight no better. Longstreet had destroyed the bridges and railroads communicating with Knoxville, so that the salvation of those who had expected rest and supplies after reaching Knoxville depended wholly on regaining Chattanooga. The return march was begun immediately, and the prospects were discouraging in the extreme, as about one hundred miles lay between the men and shoes, clothing and food. The roads were rough and hard frozen, and many were obliged to take pieces of their clothing to protect their feet from being cut and torn away by piecemeal. Blood could be traced along the line of march, and for three or four days the return to Chattanooga began to compare with the historical "Retreat from Moscow." At about forty miles from Chattanooga, and after the troops had apparently been taxed to the utmost, General Howard ordered a halt, and a detail of all shoemakers. These men were set at work to make a substitute for shoes from the green hides of cattle, which proved a failure—they were "too slippery." After spending a day or two on the experiment, and seeing that the men would starve before they could be shod, the march was resumed and the men ordered to get to Chattanooga as best they could. On their arrival at Chattanooga the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth crossed the Tennessee into Lookout Valley, where it built comfortable quarters and remained during the winter. Previous to the spring campaign the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were consolidated, forming the Twentieth Army Corps, and adopting the badge of the Twelfth Corps—the five-pointed star. General Hooker was placed in command of the Twentieth, and General Howard of the Fourth Army Corps. In the new organization, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth was assigned to the Second Brigade of the Second Division under General Geary. The regiments comprising this brigade were the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth, and One Hundred and Nineteenth New York, the Twenty-seventh, Seventy-third and One Hundred and Ninth Pennsylvania and Thirty-third New Jersey, under the command of Colonel Bushbeck of the Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania. After the expiration of the Twenty seventh Pennsylvania's term of service, the brigade was commanded by General, formerly Colonel, Jones of the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth New York.

On the 3d day of May, 1864, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, as a part of Sherman's Army, started on the Atlanta campaign. In the charge, or in the three charges, in the fruitless attempt to drive the enemy from Rocky Face Ridge, the regiment suffered severely from the enemy's fire, and the rocks and boulders sent down the steep sides of the mountain among the men. Again at Peach Tree Creek, one of the severest engagements before Atlanta, the regiment sustained severe loss in killed, wounded and captured. The old Eleventh and Twelfth, but now the Twentieth, had distinguished themselves in every emergency of danger and hardship from the time they reached the West until the fall of Atlanta, and when that important event occurred, they were designated as the "Army of Occupation," and took up their quarters in the late Rebel stronghold. For nearly three months the regiment had been marching, flanking, skirmishing and fighting, according to the tactics of Sherman, and now the survivors of the campaign could enjoy their term of vacation as only tired soldiers could. Rest, food, new clothing and the addition of about eighty recruits to the ranks of the regiment, together with such members as had reported for duty from the hospitals, gave new life and strength to the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, so that when it filed out of Atlanta with eight days' rations and "sixty rounds" per man, on November 15, 1864, it was ready for duty. Marching with the left wing of Sherman's Army, it passed, in its "March to the Sea," through Decatur, Social Circle, Madison, Eatonton, Milledgeville, Sandersville, Hebron, Davidsborough, Louisville, Millen and Springfield to Savannah, making a journey of three hundred and ten miles. The march through Georgia has been too often described to require a description here. It would be a serious reflection to suppose that the boys of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth failed on any occasion to be present at any festival or "high jinks" occurring in their vicinity, or neglected to acquaint themselves with the topography and resources of the country through which they were passing. Many of them were country-bred, and when so far from home their conduct should not be closely criticised. As the army advanced through Georgia, caution while foraging became the more necessary from the fact that the Rebel governor of Georgia had ordered out all of his State Militia to retard Sherman's progress by every possible means. Consequently a forager started out on a hunt with doubtful prospects of a safe return, and if he succeeded in making the journey to the sea in safety, he became an expert in strategy, bush-whacking and stealing. Many times he would be so closely hemmed in that he would be obliged to abandon his horse, with whatever spoils he had gathered, and take refuge in the swamps. George H. Morris, a member of Company C, failed to return from a foraging trip, and was captured. Charley Clute, another member of the same company, was captured by Wheeler's Cavalry, while foraging on a plantation. In addition to the supplies for which he had been sent to assist in gathering, he particularly wanted a better pair of pants, and while in the house and making an exchange with the planter, he was surprised and captured.

At Milledgeville the regiment enjoyed a few days' rest and assisted in regulating the municipal affairs of the city. Some troops of that wing of the army gathered in the Assembly Chamber of the State Capitol and enacted the farce of reconvening the Legislature, passing ordinances of secession, passing resolutions providing for the preservation and maintenance of the Confederacy, and adjourning in haste and confusion when it was announced that "the Yankees are coming," as Governor Brown and advisers had done but a few hours previous. On arriving before Savannah the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth took part in the siege of that place, in which the regiment sustained a few losses. After the fall of Fort McAllister, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth was ordered by General Geary, by direction of General Slocum, to occupy an island in the Savannah river and in line with the extreme left flank of the Union Army. The movement was successfully made, the regiment taking possession silently by night, fortifying their position, and holding the island until Savannah surrendered. Again the boys of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth were permitted to enjoy the comforts and pleasures of city life, while their colonel, being of the aristocracy, drank whisky galore. The regiment occupied comfortable quarters in the city, and, for a month, enjoyed the full measure of good times. The people of Savannah manifested no great displeasure at the change of masters, but opened their houses to dancing parties, while the young ladies of the city were nothing loath to join the merry dance with a Yankee partner. Theaters and concerts were improvised, and the army of occupation at Savannah made merry, for Sherman had made the city a "Christmas present" to President Lincoln.

Again the "Forward" was ordered, and on the 27th of January, 1865, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth started northward in the direction of Augusta, crossing the Savannah river and entering South Carolina at Sisters Ferry. On this march the army again subsisted upon the country — foragers detailed under a commissioned officer gathering whatever was needed by the army and applying the torch to whatever remained of service to the enemy. The march of five hundred miles from Savannah, Ga., to Raleigh, N. C., consumed two months of time, and involved much fatigue, but, on the whole, afforded greater facilities for fun than the campaign through Georgia. The spirit of adventure had taken broader and deeper root, and it was possible that the "bummers" and foragers alone could have whipped any part or the whole of the Rebel army on that route. During this march the ordinary bill of fare for the "high private" embraced flour, meal, sweet potatoes, pork, hams, chickens, turkeys, geese, ducks, lard, preserves and molasses; while his personal estate often included all kinds of wearing apparel, silver ware, jewelry, and gold and silver coin. After a day of hazardous and successful foraging, the bummers would spend the early hours of the evening around their camp fires in relating the adventures of the day, or pitting against each other, game cocks, captured during the forays.

The regiment arrived at Goldsborough, March 24, and remained until the morning of April 10. During their stay here they were again in communication with the outside world, and several rejoined the regiment who had been discharged from hospitals, and a few others who had been exchanged from Rebel prisons. At the time of leaving Goldsborough, the boys, having heard of the victories around Richmond, started out at daylight of April 10, with full confidence of their ability to wipe out Johnson's Army, which was supposed to stand between them and peace, but it was their good fortune to not meet the enemy again in serious combat. At Bentonville, the brigade was ordered back to protect the wagon train from an expected assault, but after a feeble attack the Rebels withdrew. Raleigh was reached in due time. Both Lee and Johnson having surrendered, the boys were given another rest, to make ready for their last march toward home and "God's country." On the 30th of April the regiment left Raleigh for Alexandria by way of Petersburg, Richmond and Chancellorsville. At Chancellorsville were found the remnants of many of the knapsacks which were left behind by the regiment when they started on their reconnoissance into the wilderness on May 2, 1863. Two years after, a remnant of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth passed the scene of their first defeat, on their triumphal march toward the capital of a preserved Union, and with no Rebel to dispute the way. The crowning event came in the "Grand Review" which closed the drama of war. One bitter dash of sorrow had been mixed with their cup of otherwise perfect joy. Their beloved "Old Abe," of whom they had sung during many toilsome marches and around many camp-fires, whom they had learned to regard as their godfather, was not there to receive them, and to hear their cheers and salutations. The regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States, at Bladensburg, near Washington, on the 10th of June, 1865, and received transportation to Albany, where it went into camp on the "Troy road," north of the city, until arrangements could be made to settle their accounts and pay the balance due for services. After a period of nearly three years' service, in camp, field and hospital, a remnant of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth New York sought their homes, to become citizens, who had been tried as if by fire, and not found wanting.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIFTH NEW YORK INFANTRY.

Organized October, 1862, and attached to Grover's Division of the Nineteenth Corps. After this corps was recalled from the south-west, recruits were enlisted to fill its ranks, and a large number were enrolled from this county by Lieutenant Sexton. The movements of the regiment after being joined by our men from Schoharie county can be inferred from the record of Corporal Webster.

Alexander M. Webster, Corporal.

Cobleskill — Farmer ; married ; age — ; enlisted September 7, 1864 ; left Albany for Hart's Island, September 25 ; Hart's Island for Baltimore and Harper's Ferry, October 6, and remained at the last place until October 26 ; joined his regiment, October 29, 1864 ; appointed company commissary and second corporal, November 2 ; detailed in train guard from Winchester to Martinsburg ; on Thanksgiving day he drew rations of turkey, geese and whisky for the company. (No veteran will infer that any of these rations went farther than the company commissary's tent.) Did regular duty with his regiment until the latter part of December, when he was made one of a detail for guard at Signal Corps head-quarters, five miles from Winchester on Sugar Loaf Mountain, and in comfortable quarters ; on the 31st of December he visited the poor-house of the county of Winchester, Va., and was provided with a dinner of beefsteak, bread, apple pie, baked potatoes, baked duck pie, and cream coffee ; as he has omitted the wine list I submit the menu to the credulity of veterans generally ; he staid at the poor-house all night ; reported at Winchester for duty, January 6, 1865 ; arrived at Savannah with his regiment, January 22, by way of Harper's Ferry and Baltimore ; sent as prison guard to Fort Pulaski, February 17, and remained on such duty until March 5, when the regiment was transported to Hilton Head, to Fort Fisher and to Newberne, N. C., where they remained in barracks until March 18 ; on that day the regiment was ordered out at road-making in the direction of Kingston ; during the two weeks the One Hundred and Seventy-fifth was engaged in this business, some one lost twenty-five sheep and several pigs — evidently not the company commissary, and perhaps no one belonging to the regiment ; the regiment remained in the city of Kingston until April 11, when it was ordered to Goldsborough, where it remained until May 1, and was then ordered to Morehead City and by transport to Savannah ; on the 15th of May Corporal Webster was detailed with fifty men to secure the timber of one of the forts which had been appropriated by the Rebel citizens under the "Cabbage" statute; the timber was found and secured under protest of the Rebels, and the approval of the commanding officer; in June was with detail of twenty-five men to cut wood five miles from the city, for camp use; returned to camp after one week, and a few days later volunteered as corporal for special duty, and reported on board the steamer "Governor Osborne," destination Augusta, to bring away the gold captured from Jefferson Davis; while engaged with the guard, in shipping and stowing the gold, Webster became satisfied that it would be comparatively safe to leave a ten gallon keg full of gold alone with a corporal, and a commissary at that; the treasure was deposited safely at Savannah and the corporal reported to his company, July 1, 1865; the regiment embarked on the steamer "North Star" for New York and was mustered out at Albany, July 8, 1865; Cobleskill, N. Y.; farmer; married. Children, Sarah L., Margaret J.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SEVENTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

This regiment was largely composed of men belonging to the old Tenth New York, which was recruited to the maximum number required for a regular regiment of infantry, and entered the service for nine months. A majority of its members were residents of Albany county and but few were from Schoharie county. Enlistments for this regiment were made principally in September, October and November of 1862. At New York city it embarked on the steamer "Merrimac" for New Orleans, stopping at Hilton Head for three days for repairs, and affording the men an opportunity to hear the Gospel preached in colors, and to enjoy a Christmas sea-bath. At Pensacola, Fla., the regiment received their arms and equipments, and after a brief stay proceeded by same steamer to New Orleans. Here it became part of Sherman's Division of the Nineteenth Army Corps. After remaining in New Orleans, doing guard duty for about four weeks, it was transferred to Camp Parapet, and a week later to Bonnie Carre, La. At this place the regiment was placed on full duty at drill, fatigue and guard. The products of the various sugar plantations in that vicinity had been seized by the United States forces after the capture of New Orleans, and a large force was required to guard the storehouses at the several places. While the regiment lay at Bonnie Carre, a large percentage of the men succumbed to the malarious effects of the climate and water, many dying in camp and on their way by steamer to Cairo, Ill. A day or two previous to the second unsuccessful assault on Port Hudson the regiment was transferred by steamer to that place and took part in the engagement, and remained as part of the besieging force until the place surrendered. After some delay the One Hundred and Seventy-seventh embarked for Cairo, Ill., where it took cars for Albany, being discharged nearly a year after entering the service. Fox in his "Losses" gives the killed and died of wounds as nine; disease, etc., one hundred and fifty-two.

UNITED STATES COLORED TROOPS.

There are many dates in the records of the colored men who entered the army from Schoharie county that I am unable to obtain, the muster-rolls of the Regular Army not being accessible. Many living are not able to remember the exact date of their enlistment or discharge. The majority from this county served in the Twentieth and Twenty-sixth United States Colored Troops. It appears from the testimony of the men, that at some time during their service, the Twenty-sixth and Twentieth were consolidated; but I infer that such impression has arisen from a fact of transfer of some of the men from the Twenty-sixth to the Twentieth. As it is not very material to this object I will place them as they enlisted, without further comment.

PRISON REPORT.

I offer no apology in presenting this "prison report." I consider it as much a part of my duty to record the evidences of moral depravity, malignity and hatred existing in the hearts of the leaders of secession and rebellion, as I do to memorize the names and services of brave men who gave their lives and service to defend and protect the inalienable rights "of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness;" and I give it as a lesson from the history of a so-called enlightened people, which teaches, from proof in evidence, that an unholy war was waged, and a monstrous crime committed by the leaders of the Southern Rebellion — a crime so great as to be beyond the right of man to condone or excuse.

Some of the readers of this report may have visited museums, where the various instruments of torture, or the models of the Roman Inquisition were exhibited, and were horrified with the ideas of consummate cruelty and pain which those inventions so forcibly suggested. They are the outcome of an oligarchy which had grown dominant and unscrupulous under a self-assumed title of Vice-Regency of Heaven. Briefly, they were the instruments of torture by which Satan proposed to humiliate or destroy all opposition to his rule over mankind. They are looked upon with loathing and remembered with reluctance.

The so-called savage meets the intruder upon his domain with the war cry, "spare not," and slays his victim outright, in what he reasonably presumes to be self-defense. His home and native land have been his for all time, his life has been one of continual warfare to maintain possession of it, and the extermination of his enemies, his only guaranty of safety. He is the "savage" which civilization abhors. Cheat him, rob him, invade his home, and stir up his thirst for blood, and yet he is the peer of the so-styled civilized man who profits by the consequences, and escapes the blow which falls upon the innocent. The adventurer found him confiding and friendly, but drove or cheated him from his home. In the far east the agents and emissaries of a monarchical power appeared like a scourge of locusts, and the savage was either subjugated to their rule or driven from his native soil, his family forever scattered, and his wife and children given over to the ravisher. Time and distance, in this life, seem long in many cases, but eternity will bridge the span between gilded thrones, affluence and worldly honors, and the poor, despoiled victims of oppression, avarice and hatred in an instant, and down into hell the devil will go. Underlying the biography of the human family from its birth to the present time, we trace the agency of the devil. When its operations are revealed openly and without a pretense to disguise, civilization becomes horrified at once ; but when dressed in the toggery of fashion ; clothed in graceful language, chanted with an accompaniment of high sounding moral logic ; and further sustained by the law of the land, it becomes a " sweet morsel under the tongue."

Ambition in both the civilized and savage mind is always followed by a desire to subjugate, when supplemented by avarice. The intents and purposes of the untutored are not long hidden from us, but to understand the motives and desires of the enlightened demon we must prolong the study, and with more care, and often become a helpless prisoner in his power, and at his disposal. War is a faithful interpreter of the passions and ambitions of those who engage in it, and the methods practiced by the opposing powers are the indices by which we may safely determine which side is fighting for good against evil. Righteousness is always tempered with mercy. Victory gained at the expense of moral principles is always followed by a revengeful persecution of the fallen victim. Whatever excuse for justification in inciting a rebellion in Heaven, does not appear, clearly, but doubtless the devil posed as a martyr and reformer as he does to this day. Knowing both good and evil, it is patent that he should picture his opposers in all the hideous wickedness of his own character, while proclaiming from the house-top, behold how great and good am I.

Allow me to give a descriptive title to the attributes and characteristics of human depravity, when it becomes exalted, which I borrow from the diary of poor Jimmey Bailey,—one of the many thousand victims of the fiendish hatred of Jeff Davis and his admirers — "the same old thing." It was "the same old thing" which incited the red man of America to massacre and scalp the helpless mother and babe, and which prompted the Tory to out-herod the savage by exceeding him in barbarity toward his neighbor. It was "the same old thing" which packed helpless prisoners in noisome dungeons, beneath the hatches of the Jersey Prison Ship, to die by untold suffering. It was "the same old thing" which inspired the arch fiend of secession to destroy, by methods which rivaled those of the Inquisition, helpless prisoners who came into his power. It was "the same old thing" which inspired this same old Jeff to publish his audacity, in his dotage, by denying his instrumentality in the crimes perpetrated under his sanction and orders, and charging the crime to those whom he hated and defied. And it was "the same old thing" which opened the pages of that professed exponent of morality and civilization, — the North American Review — to receive and promulgate the venom of hypocrisy, that the crimes of this chief of traitors might be condoned on earth. It was no mercy when this man was permitted to live. As mercy and charity were strangers to him, he should have been taught, by the bullet or rope, that it was the greatest measure of forbearance to permit one coward to die and atone for the lives of thousands of brave and honorable men. This hero! chieftain! and statesman! of the South, in his dying days, said that the men confined in his prisons received all the food that the resources of his government could spare, and that the responsibility of their deaths and sufferings rested upon their own government. It is "the same old thing," and it becomes only children to argue with Satan. He does not say that his terms for exchange of prisoners involved the rights of equality and self-respect on the part of the Union government. He does not say that clothing and necessities of life sent by the Union government, and by friends and relatives, to men confined in his death-pens, were diverted and appropriated to the use of their jailers and enemies, after an agreement that they would be delivered to those for whom they were intended. He does not say that the character, preparation and system of delivery of the pittance of food furnished his prisoners, was such as to insure the greatest amount of suffering, and the highest death-rate. He does not say that his prison discipline was so inhuman in its administration that none but "home guards" of his soldiery could be trusted with its enforcement. He does not say that his prisoners were deliberately shot for extending a defenseless hand an arm's length beyond the "dead line," to secure a sip of less polluted water. He does not say that after being robbed by their captors of such clothing as would cover their nakedness, these helpless men were denied the privilege of securing from the surrounding country sufficient wood to shelter them from heat and cold, and to cook their beggarly ration of corn and cob. He does not say that thousands of Union men were shot and maltreated for showing less resistance to their captors, than he, when he was overtaken in his motherly hood and water-proof, or when he rebelled against the handcuffs at Fortress Monroe. He does not say that while thousands of men, good, true and incorruptible, were dying for want of the least of the necessaries of life, he was carefully saving hundreds of thousands of dollars in gold, stolen from a government which had honored him in office and military training, that he might escape from a country which he had been chief and foremost in trying to destroy, and live in affluence in a foreign land.

It was a cruel blow to the supremacy of truth and justice and christianity when Jeff Davis was permitted to live and enjoy the luxuries of life while the wail of heartbroken mothers and widows throughout the northland was heard in the cries of "Oh where is my boy." "Oh that I knew that he was killed, and did not die in prison." "Oh if I could only have fed him."

The few sketches following have been given after much persuasion. The fearful experiences of these men have left them loth to speak of their prison life.

DIARY OF JAMES BAILEY.

This diary was kept by Bailey in one of the small pocket editions so commonly used by the boys in the army. After he became aware that he could not live to see his home and friends, he requested a fellow prisoner to preserve his diary, and in case he survived him, to send it to his parents at Gilboa. The comrade survived, reached his home at Albany, and when sufficiently recovered from the effects of his imprisonment, made the journey to Gilboa, and placed the prison diary of James Bailey into the hand of his mother. The little leather-covered book with a needle attached to the pocket, and the scarcely legible words recorded from day to day, are all that "came back from the war" to the father and mother of James Bailey.

Aug. 25th, 1864. Taken prisoner at Reams Station, near Petersburg by Mahone's Brigade, Brigadier-General Wilcox's Division, A. P. Hill's Corps. Marched to Petersburg, guarded by a regiment of North Carolinans. Remained there over night, then marched to the station, took the cars for Richmond. Stayed there over night, then marched out just across the street into an old tobacco warehouse, from there sent to Belle Island.

Aug. 31st. A prisoner of war on Belle Island. Our day for muster for pay in camp, but such is not our fate.

The United States government owes me six months' pay and an installment of fifty dollars.

Sept. 1st. A prisoner of war on Belle Island. No signs of being paroled or exchanged.

Sept. 2d. A bright sunny day on Belle Island. Nothing new relating to our present situation.

Sept. 4th. Still on Belle Island. Weather hot and sultry, some prospects of rain.

Sept. 5th. No rain has yet fallen. The weather has been very uncomfortable for us, being exposed without shade or shelter.

Sept. 6th. Rained the night previous, which made things very uncomfortable for us. Continues cloudy and misty till night, then tents given to us.

Sept. 7th. Morning finds us in the same old position, the weather fine.

Sept. 8th. Out again to be numbered. A hot day. Nothing but camp rumors to cheer us up.

Sept. 9th. Again turned out to be numbered. Remained out till dark. About midnight, a large fire in Richmond.

Sept. 10th. Still a prisoner on Belle Island. All turned out to be counted and to have camp regulated, the weather hot and sultry.

Sept. 11th. Remained in close quarters through the day. No material change in the weather or rations.

Sept. 12th. All out again to be numbered, and told off in squads.

Sept. 13th. Finds all here yet, the most in good health.

Sept. 14th. In camp all day. All kinds of rumors afloat, amounting to nothing. Some heavy firing in the direction of the "Burg."

Sept. 15th. Enjoying ourselves in the best manner possible for us while here. Weather fair.

Sept. 16th. Every thing the same in camp. No sign of deliverance.

Sept. 17th. Out to be counted and have the camp policed. Day fair and pleasant.

Sept. 18th. Turned out to be counted, came back before noon. The weather has every appearance of rain. Some cannonading toward Petersburg, results not known to us.

Sept. 19th. Again out to be counted, nothing new for us.

Sept. 20th. Out again in the morning, nothing new in camp to-day, no signs of being released.

Sept. 21st. Yet on the island. Turned out to be counted.

Sept. 22d. As usual out to be counted, did not remain out long.

Weather some cooler to-day. Did not feel able to walk much. Cannonading in front of Petersburg, nothing known of its results.

Sept. 23d. Out in the morning to be counted. Some rain in the forenoon, appetite some better to day.

Sept. 24th. Turned out to be counted. Weather rainy and bad to be out. Heavy firing toward Petersburg.

Sept. 25th. A beautiful Sabbath day on Belle Island. The men mostly in good spirits. We were out again to be counted in the morning.

Sept. 26th. Out in this morning to be counted, rained all day.

Sept. 27th. Out again to be counted. Weather fair, some heavy firing in the direction of Petersburg.

Sept. 28th. Still a prisoner on Belle Island. Weather fair in the morning. Turned out just at night to be counted, rained at night.

Sept. 29th. All out to be counted. Heavy fighting down the river.

Sept. 30th. Still on the Island a prisoner. All out to be counted. Some signs of rain. The rest of the prisoners came from Libby prison.

Oct. 1st. Morning dawns cold and chilly. The prisoners out to be counted. Commences to rain, continues all day. Heavy fighting on the river.

2d. The Sabbath, a beautiful day after the rain of yesterday. All out to be counted, returned to camp. But little excitement in camp to-day and night leaves every thing quiet.

3d. Morning all taken out to be counted. The weather rainy. Some more prisoners sent on the island from Libby.

4th. Quite pleasant to-day, turned out to be counted, one thousand sent away, whereabouts not known; 300 more sent away in the night, in all 1300 for Salisbury, N. C.

5th. A pleasant day on the Island. Out again to be counted,—but little excitement this day. Five squads more, 500 sent off the Island this afternoon.

7th. Out to be counted in the forenoon, came back to camp, took dinner, shortly after drew our supper and three-fourths of a loaf of bread, then left the Island. Took the cars at half-past 10 o'clock for Danville. Remained in the cars all that night.

8th. Arrived at Danville late in the forenoon. The weather cold and chilly. Again took the cars for our place of destination. Was detained on the way. Remained on the cars all night.

9th. Arrived at Greensborough late at night. Left the cars, marched out a little from town to some woods, and had three crackers given out to us. The night very cold, a heavy frost had fallen.

Oct. 10th. Arrived at Salisbury at 8 o'clock. The night was very cold and chilly. Did not get food of any kind, things look dismal for us.

11th. Passed up into Salisbury in the afternoon, no grub for us yet. The pains of hunger begin to gnaw us to a fearful extent. Late at night our bread came to us, one-half loaf to a man.

12th. We got our allowance of bread and meat at noon or after, this day finds us in a dull state of feeling.

13th. Morning finds the weather some cooler. To day we got our allowance of bread and rice soup, some of our division drew hard tack.

14th. Still a prisoner at Salisbury, N. C. The day quite pleasant. We got our usual allowance of bread and rice soup. Nothing going on of any interest in camp.

15th. Finds us the same. Weather fair although cool at night. To-day our food is bread and molasses, which goes very well for a change.

16th. This Sabbath day finds us still prisoners of war. Our food to-day is rice soup and molasses. One of the officers shot by the guard, twelve more said to have died since the night previous.

17th. A fair day for us in camp. We drew our rations first in the morning, rice soup and molasses, no meal issued to any of us.

18th. Every thing the same. Morning finds us all waiting for something to eat, but we do not get any thing till dark, then get warm bread.

19th. Finds camp full of rumors. About 500 more prisoners brought from Danville. We got our grub sometime in the afternoon, rice "tay" and molasses. Our officers taken away from here.

20th. Morning finds us alive and well. We get our ration of bread and a ration of meat.

21st. Finds this division waiting for our rations, but do not know when they will be given to us.

22d. Finds all in their usual state of feelings. Nothing of any note to-day, the weather fair and chilly.

23d. A quiet day in camp. Weather mild and pleasant, though cold at night.

24th. Finds us in camp waiting for our grub. No bread, no flour. Molasses comes when the train arrives. One-third of the division drew flour. Thaddens Laymen of this company died between the hours of 2 and 12 o'clock, of chronic diarrhea.

Oct. 25th. Finds us yet prisoners. Do not get our food quite as regular as before, though have to be content with what we get.

26th. Finds me alive and well. We get our allowance of food for the day. A great many dead taken out for burial.

27th. Morning weather hazy. About noon began to rain, which continues during the night. Some more prisoners brought here, the most part taken in the valley. This division draws flour, no bread baked for us.

28th. Morning finds the weather clear. Nineteen said to have died the night previous. We got our meat this forenoon, got some rice soup in the afternoon, but no bread, no flour.

29th. Finds us yet alive; we get our meat in the forenoon. Afternoon some rice soup but as yet no bread or flour. Weather fair and pleasant. Just at night a small ration of rice soup.

30th. A beautiful day. Every thing quiet in camp. This division draws flour and rice soup.

31st. Finds us yet prisoners. Weather fair, nothing of importance in camp. We get our allowance of bread and rice soup. George Wright goes to the hospital.

Nov. 1st. November comes in warm and pleasant. The camp full of rumors about being paroled. To-day we got bread and rice soup, some got hard tack.

2d. Morning dawns, when it begins to rain. Continues to rain all day long. We drew our flour just at night. Adolphus Brandon died in hospital prison.

Nov. 3d. Finds the weather very cool with a drizzling rain, which continues through the day. A good many dead in camp. We draw oats, wheat bran, and rice soup.

4th. Finds us yet in camp. Do not feel very well to-day. Weather cool and uncomfortable.

5th. Finds us in camp yet. The camp full of rumors. We get our rice soup and draw flour. Some frost.

6th. Another beautiful Sabbath day in camp; the sun shines most beautiful. We get rice soup in the forenoon, some meal in the afternoon. Six hundred prisoners came in last night.

7th. Still in camp, weather fine. No grub yet of any kind. Some thin soup, no bread of any kind to-day.

8th. A warm and lovely day in camp, for election. Some excitement as to who will be president.

9th. Finds us in camp yet, alive and well. We get rice soup and warm bread, corn and wheat. Rain the most part of the night.

Nov. 10th. A beautiful day, warm and pleasant. We get our soup.

11th. Finds us yet in camp, doing the best we can to live through this prison life. We get our grub — bread, soup and meat.

12th. Yet a prisoner in Salisbury. Get our bread quite regularly now. To-day we got bread, meat and rice soup. Thus ends the day.

13th. A still, quiet day in camp. Weather fair. We got our rations of bread, meat, and rice soup. The boys in good spirits but anxious to get back to the Federal lines.

14th. Yet alive and well. Fair weather. Get our bread and meat early in the day. The camp is full of rumors. Get our rice soup.

15th. Finds us still in camp. The weather is fair. Draw corn bread and soup early in the morning; get nothing more for the day. The camp full of rumors about exchange. Still I don't see it.

16th. Morning still finds me alive and well. The weather has some appearance of rain. We draw our rice soup, no meat to-day. The bread comes after a while, hot from the oven.

17th. Finds all in camp as usual. Weather fair and nice. We got our bread and rice soup, no meat.

18th. Finds me yet in good health. To-day we got our bread, soup, and meat, — liver, lights, eyes, etc. Weather fair.

24th. Yet in camp, well. Weather cool and stormy. Get our food as usual, quarter rations.

25th. Yet a prisoner at Salisbury. No signs of any relief from our government. Just at night an attempt was made to break out of camp, but did not accomplish much. Some killed and wounded. All on quarter rations. Ralph Bear died in hospital — diarrhea. Belonged to Company B, Fourth New York Heavy Artillery.

26th. Finds all in camp alive and well. Weather fair and pleasant. Get our rations of bread.

27th. Quite a fine day. It finds me in the hospital with the diarrhea. Some better to-day.

29th. The same old thing. Diarrhea quite bad to-day. We get our rations of bread, meat, and rice soup.

30th. Yet in the hospital. The big chimney fell down about noon, killing one man and bruising two more very bad.

Dec. 1st. A pleasant day for the first of December. The sun shines bright and nice. Not much of any thing going on in camp.

NOTE.—Thus closes a very conservative diary. The last entry apparently written with as much courage as the first, yet the writer was lying in the Rebel hospital, and from December 1, 1864, until a lingering death terminated his life, nearly two months later, he was unable to continue his memoranda. Inscription on fly leaf of diary:—James L. Bailey, of Gilboa, Schoharie county, N. Y., died at Salisbury Prison, January 25, 1865.

LIEUTENANT MARTIN WITBECK.

No. 4 PROSPECT HILL ST., }
GRENOCK, SCOTLAND. }

COMRADE GEORGE H. WARNER — I received your letter of September 4th, desiring any information I could give in connection with the death of Lientenant Martin Witbeck. It is not much that I can tell, but it is given heartily to the project you have in view. First, he was enrolled in Company I, Fifty-first New York Volunteers; his age on enlistment was 19 years. Occupation, farmer. Enlisted October 5, 1861, at Richmondville, N. Y., by D. K. Johnson, for three years, and re-enlisted December 1, 1863, for another three years or during the war. He was promoted to corporal, October 21, 1861, to sergeant, September 30, 1862, and to first sergeant, March 19, 1863. The date of his promotion to second lieutenant I cannot give, but think it would be September 1, 1864. I was associated with him in the company for about two years and a half. He was of a retiring disposition, but kindness itself. Never quarreling, to my knowledge, with any of his comrades; in fact he would rarely continue an argument with any one if he saw they were inclined to lose their temper. He never shirked, however disagreeable, any duty he was called upon to perform, and in a word, I might say he was generally beloved by the members of Company I. On the 30th of September, 1864, away to the left of our lines in front of Petersburg, we had an engagement with the enemy, when most of our regiment were either killed, wounded or captured, Martin being among the number of prisoners. We were sent to Libby prison at Richmond, and when there, had to turn over any valuables in our possession, with the promise of their being restored when we were liberated. That promise may have been kept in some cases, but I believe the majority was otherwise. If you did not hand over you were searched, and every thing found on you was confiscated. We were kept in Libby three or four days, and then sent to Salisbury, N. C., where we tasted the miseries of a Rebel prison. When captured we had to give up our great coats, and we little thought what that meant, but it was nakedness and coldness coupled with starvation. When in Salisbury we hatched a plot to have a try for freedom, but on the day when the attempt was to have been made, the plot became known, the guards were alarmed and doubled, and the officers separated from the men, and got the route to Danville, Va., where we arrived in due course, but the change was for the better. We were housed in a large three-story building. It looked as if it had been used as a tobacco warehouse. We occupied the second and third floors, sentries being placed on the ground plat. So there we remained for many weary weeks, never getting out for exercise, except sometimes getting on the detail which went to the river for water, under a strong guard. I suppose you are acquainted with the rations served out to the prisoners. It was, as near as I could estimate, about three-fourths of a pound of corn bread per diem and a slop which they called soup, sometimes twice a week. The bread could easily be eaten for breakfast, then followed gnawing hunger until another day. The effects of this diet continuously caused dysentery among many. Among the number, our comrade, Martin Witbeck, was so attacked and became weaker every day. He was very patient, and complained very little, and we hoped an exchange of prisoners might come before it would be too late to save him, but it was not to be. He had a small Bible or Testament with him which he was always reading and from which he seemed to derive every consolation. At length he got so poorly that we urged on the Rebel doctor that he was in such condition of health that he should grant him the privilege of entering the hospital, where he might be better attended to and have a chance of more comforts than was in our power to supply. He granted the request at last, but too late to save his life. I rather think their policy was to do to death as many Union soldiers as they could without being exactly accused of willful murder. I received permission to visit him in hospital the day before he died. He was cheerful and willing that God should take away the life He gave, but had a great longing that he might be spared to have seen home and friends once more. I know his friends at home sent a box to him while in prison. It contained clothing and provisions. It got as far as Richmond and no farther. If these had reached him they might have been the means of saving his life, and a gain to the Union cause, in the prolonged service of a faithful soldier. I remember Martin telling of his brother losing a leg at Gettysburg, and something reminds me that I saw him at his home where I visited in the winter of 1863 and '64, when our regiment was on leave after re-enlisting. Having no relatives in America, I thought I could not do better than visit some of the places where most of our company had been reernited from, notably Schenevus and that locality. I was in America in 1882, the only time since the conclusion of the war, but had no time to visit in your locality. I am hoping that things may so turn out, that I shall have soon the pleasure.

With greetings to all comrades,

I remain yours very truly,

WILLIAM CALDWELL.

HIRAM KNISKERN.

On the night previous to the battle of Reams Station, I was sent out on the picket line in advance of our breastworks, and occupied one of the rifle pits until we were driven out by a heavy force of the enemy the next day. On the way to our lines one of our comrades was severely wounded and I stopped and assisted in carrying him to the rear of our lines, where he could be cared for by the surgeon. While resting I heard heavy firing along our lines but saw no signs of our troops giving away. After being rested I secured another gun to replace the one I had been obliged to abandon in helping the wounded comrade, and started in the direction of our line; I soon met a man wearing a mixed Rebel and Union uniform; we passed each other without speaking, but after two or three rods distance we both turned and looked at each other, neither speaking. Soon three more Rebels approached from the same direction, and one of them hailed the man who had passed me with, why don't you make that man throw down his gun." He then said, "throw down your gun." Seeing I was in for it, I seized my gun by the muzzle and flung it far to one side into a low swampy place, and followed the Johnnie, who said, "Ill take care of you." On reaching the place where our troops had been stationed, I found they had been driven out and many of them captured, among the number my captain. About five o'clock we were taken farther to the rear of the Rebel line and counted, the number given as 500. We were taken a round-about march of 14 miles to reach Petersburg 7 miles away, and from there sent to Richmond, and confined in an old tobacco warehouse. While a prisoner I had two meals a day, the first consisted of a two-inch cubical block of corn bread, and a 2 by 3 inch slice of bacon. The bacon was often densely populated, and would have made a census enumerator tired. The second meal consisted of the same quantity of corn bread as in the morning, and bean soup instead of bacon. The soup was dipped from a large bucket, and as most of the beans rested peacefully at the bottom those first served got no beans but some flies.

Those served last got more beans and bugs. In eating this ration we could make a lively crackling between our teeth, any thing to fill an aching void. The beans were red and about the size of our small beans at home. The floor of our prison was cleaned twice a week. After I was transferred to Belle Isle, I found my quarters less comfortable, and every thing much worse. In warm days the sand could be seen to move, and the lice could be seen on the fence as thick as their little consins are sometimes seen on hops. After being on Belle Isle 15 days, our squad received rations, with orders to be ready for Andersonville, but we were taken to Libby over night and the next day paroled for Annapolis.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

I was taken prisoner late in the night of June 3, 1864, with a lieutenant of Company B of my regiment, and taken to Richmond, where I was placed in a hospital to be treated for a wound in my shoulder. I was sent to Libby prison June 20th, and before my wound was healed. Sent to Belle Isle Aug. 21st, and to Salisbury, N. C., Oct. 7th, and remained until February 22d, 1865, when I left Salisbury for the Union lines, signed a parole at Goldsborough, and reached the Union lines two days later. During my imprisonment I came very near dying, having contracted scurvy, diarrhea, varicose veins, rheumatism, congestion of the lungs, and being nearly reduced to a skeleton. During my imprisonment I could have had double rations for going out and working for the Rebs, but I preferred to starve. I have gnawed bones after others have made soup from them, and eaten a ration that a Dutchman would refuse, a bull's eye. They gave us rations of raw tripe, right from the critter. I stuck a stick into mine, to roast it, and it was the sweetest morsel I ever tasted. They gave us the snouts of cattle for rations. I ate things which a hungry dog would not touch, but I'm sick of writing about it.

LEVI GUERNSEY.

After the battle of Gettysburg, the brigade to which I belonged moved back into Virginia, and went into camp between Bristoe and Catlett's Stations. One morning soon after, I was ordered by my lieutenant, to take my ambulance to Bristoe Station for some needed repairs, and with Sergeant Jacob Dieter for company I set out. On reaching the point where I usually crossed the railroad in going to the station, the sergeant insisted that I should not cross, but take a road which ran parallel to the railroad, and go to the station by a new route. After some arguments we took the new route and continued our journey until we passed into a wooded field, and had gone but a short distance farther, when we discovered two horses and the legs of men who were partially hidden in some bushes by the roadside. As we came to a point opposite the horses, three Johnnies on horseback dashed out of the woods and ordered us to "halt" and "surrender." Sergeant Dieter laughed and said, "Ha, Ha, Levi, the Johnnies have got us, haven't they? I thought they had and that I could give the sergeant the credit of it. As I did not obey the orders to leave the road and drive into the woods immediately, the boss Rebel presented his revolver at my head and said, "you——Yankee——aint you going to turn in and surrender?" I then wheeled my team into a by-road which was exceedingly rough. "Trot them horses or I'll blow you through." I managed to make my team trot for a few rods until we came to a place where three more guerillas joined us. Some of our captors were Mosby's men and the rest were native bushwhackers, ten or twelve in all. After joining the last party, my horses were unharnessed and saddles put on them. Our overcoats and blankets were taken from us, my watch and all valuables were taken from me, and we were put under guard. In a short time more prisoners were brought in, my lieutenant who had sent me to Bristoe, a sergeant and a sutler. My lieutenant looked very much ashamed. Soon after, another sutler with a four-horse team and a negro were brought in, and a little later a dispatch-bearer was added to the number of prisoners. Then we were started for Orange C. H., and after reaching that place we were put on board a train for Richmond, Va. On arriving at Richmond we were confined in Libby for about thirty-six hours, and then turned out on Belle Isle. Here I met two of my old neighbors, Wallace Earls and Asher Bice. I asked them what made them look so. They said, "by the time you've been here as long as we have you'll look so too." I remained on Belle Isle five months, including one month which I spent in the so-called hospital. The hospital was an old tobacco warehouse. No fire was made for us, even while the weather was sufficiently cold to make heavy ice in the James river. The windows were raised from the bottom and lowered from the top. We had no clothing and but two sheets for covering. When the weather moderated, fires were built to make it as uncomfortable from heat as it had been from cold. I guess the Rebels tried to kill us with thermometers. While I was in the hospital, several were brought in from the Island with hands and feet so badly frozen that they were sawn off. Six men died on the bunk next to mine while I was there.

I was treated for diarrhea and rheumatism, but when they thought I wouldn't die they sent me back to the Island. The rations at the hospital were a trifle better than on the Island, but very scant and just enough to aggravate. About the 25th of February, 1864, there came great rumors of exchange for certain squads. I thought I would "flank out" and succeed in getting into squad two. The crowd was very great and flankers crowded so that the guard could not keep them back. The officer in command of the guard showed how to keep the prisoners back by taking a gun and stabbing one through the leg with the bayonet. Eight squads were taken out and confined in Castle Thunder over night. In the morning, instead of going to City Point for exchange as we expected, we were sent in a southerly direction, passing through Petersburg, Charlotte, N. C., and reaching the "Pen" at Andersonville, March 1st, 1864. Our journey consumed seven days, and as we were packed in the common box freight car as tightly as we could sit, our bodies became worn through, raw and bleeding, and our sufferings were painful beyond description. We were the first to enter Andersonville prison which, at that time, embraced about eighteen acres of ground, surrounded by a stockade thirteen feet high. Within, the ground was covered mostly by tree-tops, the bodies of which had been used in forming the stockade. These were used for fuel and soon disappeared. We were driven into the pen as hogs or sheep are driven. Every few days, additions were made to our number from other prisons and from captures made in the field, until our number was estimated at 30,000. We were guarded by a regiment of Rebel soldiers under Capt. Wirtz. A pole or rail three feet from the ground, and at a distance of 2 rods from the stockade encircled our camp and was called the "dead line." Orders were issued to the guards to shoot those who put their hands on the dead line or attempted to cross it. I saw a man, who wished to die, put his hand on the dead line and dare the guard to shoot him. He was shot immediately. A swampy portion of ground ran through our prison from side to side, and through this ran a small stream of water which was our only supply, after being used for bathing purposes by the guards outside the stockade. It was subject to poison from the drainage of the prison ground on each side as it flowed through and became a poison for drink. By persistent digging better water was sometimes obtained afterward. Our ration usually consisted of a two-inch cube of corn bread, and occasionally bean soup, water colored with beans, and bugs floating on top. If I got 4 or 5 beans in my ration I thought I did well.

"Roll call" was made every morning, and if Wirtz felt ugly, as he commonly did, rations were stopped for days at a time. If any were missing, the bugle was sounded, and the bloodhounds were put on track, and in most cases, the men were captured and brought back. Some were punished with "ball and chain," some by the "stocks," others were tied up by the thumbs, while others were "bucked and gagged." Wirtz advised us to try to escape, said it was our duty to try, and his duty to capture us if he could. During a part of the time we drew "corn and cob" meal instead of bread. This meal we sifted through an old tin plate with holes punched through it. Our condition became such that many were brutish, many maniacs, and others idiots. We were reduced to skeletons, and afflicted with rheumatism, dropsy, scurvy and dysentery. Those who had money could trade with the Rebel guards and improve their condition a little. The "bummers" among us would steal or kill to get the money and valuables which the new arrivals might succeed in bringing into prison. Murders became so frequent that the guilty ones were found out, tried by jury composed of their fellow-prisoners, convicted and hung. Wirtz furnished the facilities for holding the trial, the material to build the scaffold, and a guard to hold the murderers until the scaffold was ready. Six men were hung, five at the first drop, one having broken his rope was caught up and hanged over again. I think it would have pleased Wirtz if we had all hung each other. After the execution our camp was quiet and we did not hear the cry, "stop that thief," "stop that murderer," any more. At one time Wirtz became very angry because some of the men could not get in line for roll-call lively enough to suit him, and kicked and struck several who were crippled and helpless. He then ordered the rations stopped for three days—the rations for the day had been cooked, and, after being kept until the third day, were brought into the prison and dealt out to the men in a putrid, maggoty state. One man ejected his ration, and another stepped up and appropriated it. While at Andersonville I was in the hospital outside the stockade for about three weeks, and fared some better on a little rice and beef soup. My pants became rags, and could not cover my body, so I went to the dead-house one morning and traded pants with a dead man, getting a better pair, which I washed and hung up to dry. In spite of my watching they were stolen, so I made another robbery of the dead on the morning following. On the first of September seven or eight hundred of us were sent to Savannah, where we staid about six weeks, and were then transferred to Millen, one or two thousand being confined there for about six more weeks. During my stay at Millen, I contracted chills and diarrhea, and thought my days were numbered, yet after ten days I recovered. The doctor came into camp with orders that the sick and wounded were to be sent North, our names were taken and we were sent to the one side of the camp where we waited for the train, without food, for two days.

After we were packed on board the cars, and before starting, we were given ten or twelve sweet potatoes each, some of which we ate raw, then and there. We were taken to a swamp within about four miles of Savannah, where we halted for the night and cooked the balance of our potatoes. In the morning we entered Savannah, old ladies brought provisions to us in baskets and we had quite a feast. In the afternoon we were put on board an exchange boat, which met one of the Union boats in the river, and it began to look like home again when I saw the old stars and stripes. On board our boat we got coffee, boiled ham, and hard tack; a most delicious meal, but the rocking of the boat and the hearty food made us all heave up Jonah. We were soon transferred to another boat, which was furnished with berths, then we were comfortable and happy, and soon on our way to Annapolis.

WILLIAM W. EARLE.

I was captured at Gettysburg on the afternoon of the first day's battle and taken to the Rebel rear, where they had gathered their prisoners together. On the 4th of July they started us for Richmond; that was the hungriest march I ever made. I received one pint of flour to go to Richmond on, a four days' journey. When we reached Harper's Ferry, there stood men on boxes shaving off bread at a dollar a slice; I happened to be one of the lucky men who had a dollar. After we came to Richmond we were put into the old tobacco warehouse for one night, and then taken to Belle Isle. At that time there were about thirty-eight out of our regiment. When we entered Belle Isle, there were about forty squads of one hundred men each; one man would draw the rations for a squad and by him they were dealt out to each man; the boys of our regiment went into "squad 38," and it went along so for about one month, when we were all taken out of our camp and marched through a tent and searched for money. Then Asher Bice and myself left the old squad 38, he going into "squad 5" and I into "squad 7." On the 30th of September, they took out eight of the first squads for exchange, which let me out. While I was a prisoner, our rations consisted of two meals per day. In the forenoon a piece of corn bread three inches square, together with a piece of meat one and one-half inches square, and in the afternoon we would draw a three-inch hunk of wheat bread and one pint of bean soup, made out of James river water, which was a muddy stream; but never mind, it gave bottom to the soup. While I was on the island we used to go out skirmishing, not for Johnnies, but for "greybacks," which stuck close to your back. I have seen them on persons who did not try to keep clean of them, like scales on a fish, heads in, tails out. We used to take our clothes off and run down the seams with our fingers and kill lots of them, but the next day there would be just as many as ever. When exchanged we were taken to City Point and from there to Annapolis.

ASHER D. BICE.

I was taken prisoner at Gettysburg, July 1, 1863, my birthday. Myself with several other comrades, a captain and a lieutenant, were surrounded by the Rebs and remained near the battle-field under guard, during the next two days. On the morning of the "glorious Fourth," we were started for Richmond, Va., where we arrived in due time, after a long and tedious march, suffering greatly at times from loss of sleep and all the time from hunger. Here I will give a little to illustrate our sufferings on that memorable march. After crossing the Potomac we were given, to each man, one-half pint of wheat flour, and then started again on our march. During the next sixty hours we received nothing more to eat, nor any sleep except what we could get during our halts of five minutes' duration. These halts would occur at intervals of six or eight hours. After arriving at Richmond we were sent to Belle Isle to board, where I remained until October 1, making just two months during which I was a prisoner of war, when I was exchanged on parole. I will not attempt to tell of our sufferings on the Island, as I consider it wholly beyond the power of tongue to tell, or pen to describe them. My weight when captured was two hundred pounds. Comrade W. W. Earle and myself, by using a little strategy, succeeded in getting paroled in the last lot that was paroled from Belle Isle. Had we not succeeded in getting away from that hell, we would, in all probability, have had the privilege of visiting Andersonville. Of my experience in Parole Camp, I need say nothing more, than that we were again under the old flag, and had plenty to eat and the wherewith to cover our backs. I was four months in Parole Camp at Annapolis, and four months at Parole Camp at Columbus, Ohio.

HARRISON KNISKERN.

The regiment moved across Germania Ford, May 5, 1864. Meeting Lee's advance, we attacked and drove them back, and held them in check from 8 A. M. until 3 P. M. We were then ordered to cover the retreat of our forces and to remain at the rear for thirty minutes before following. During that time we were cut off, and after repeated attacks of the enemy, we took to the woods and fields. While crossing a ravine and jumping a fence, my saddle-girth gave way, turning the saddle and landing me on my back. I then became a demoralized infantry-man, and crossing a stream my cavalry boots filled with water, and with my two hundred and six pounds of body I was compelled to hide in a ditch. I was found by a Reb. who took me to a cousin of his from the Shenandoah Valley, and was treated well while with him. While joking with the Rebs. and inducing them to read one of my "best girl's" letters, I succeeded in hiding and saving a ten-dollar greenback, and a two-dollar knife. We received our first rations, two sea biscuits, from the Rebs. at Orange C. H. at one o'clock the next morning. Our next ration consisted of a pint of raw corn.

The greater part of ten months I spent in Andersonville, Ga., and Florence, S. C. When captured I was wearing a new cavalry suit, which I had taken some pains to procure to wear home on furlough a short time before. The gold-plated buttons from the coat I sold from time to time for four dollars each in Rebel money. The food and exposure at Andersonville laid me up for weeks, and to make it more sure to stay by me, they sent me to Florence to winter, with but little clothing and bare footed. Ice froze nights which would bear a man. I had for mates in the last-named prison, Tripp Parker and Nears Doaglas, of Maine, who died by my side. I saw sights which ought to cause any American citizen to blush. One "Lon" Bonek, of Breakabeen, died, alive with vermin, and nothing given to help him free himself. I was paroled at Goldsboronrgh, N. C.; treated for a while at Wilmington, N. C., for bone fever, then sent home on furlough, and discharged, June 14, 1865.

GEORGE W. GUERNSEY.

The "Battle of Peach Tree Creek," Ga., within about three miles of Atlanta, was the last battle in which I participated. Our regiment was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Allen H. Jackson, who was a brave soldier, and on this occasion, I thought, a little reckless, as he was so far in advance of his regiment as to be out of sight when we went into action, it being a wooded section where we were operating. Some of our men on the right were firing, although from where my company stood, not a graycoat was to be seen. I determined to hold my fire until the enemy appeared, and while waiting and watching, I noticed that only one man was left near me; the whole line so far as I could see had retreated. This man was Corporal Davis Gilbourne, a fearless soldier. About this time the colonel came running back like a deer, to overtake his regiment, having lost one of his fingers by a shot from the enemy. I asked him if he saw the Rebs.; he said, "Good God! don't you see them there?" and away he went without giving a word of command. Then all at once the Johnnies swarmed upon us so that I deemed it impossible to escape. As they came up Corporal Gilbourne shook his fist at them, exclaiming "surrender! —you, surrender. But we were only two, and when we did not throw down our arms, and they were about to bayonet us, we surrendered and were pulled to the rear as fast as our captors could travel, we feeling assured that in a few minutes the Union lines would be reformed, and shot and shell would be flying after us, and so it turned out. This was General Hood's first battle after he had superseded Joe E. Johnson. He made a terrible onslaught, took about two thousand prisoners, but paid dearly for it, as history will inform all who read. We all marched to Atlanta and were put on board the cars for Andersonville. While waiting in Atlanta, those Confederate officers who were around were quite exultant.

One colonel boasted that they had captured all of our artillery "some 30 pieces or more." I told him that was only what we had in one hole. They found it to be so, by the way Sherman sent the shells among them before we left Atlanta. We arrived at Andersonville without incident. At the gate most of the prisoners were searched, and all money and other articles were taken from them; all of great value to prisoners in such a place. Here we met the notorious Capt. Wirtz; he stormed and threatened like a demon, although no one said any thing, and he was having every thing his own way. He had a battery on a knoll outside and commanding the camp, and declared that he would fire on them if he saw them collecting in crowds at any time. It will be remembered that this man expiated the crime of shooting helpless prisoners, on the gallows at Washington after the war. At Andersonville I found my brother who had been held a prisoner for about a year, having been confined on Belle Isle in the James river at Richmond, in tents without fire and while ice was a foot thick in the James river. Like hundreds of others he was about used up. The stories related of Andersonville are not exaggerations. Men were lying upon the ground in all directions, almost naked and covered with filth and scurf, without bed or shelter, groaning and dying in pain, so that, many days, scores would be carried out. Our stay at Andersonville was abridged by Sherman's progress "through Georgia," and we were taken to Millen. Any place was better than Andersonville, which is only another name for misery and death. Our daily fare at that place was a piece of corn bread about as large as three fingers, with a small piece of bacon, or occasionally a small piece of beef. At Millen we had corn meal or pea beans, with weevils or bugs in them, and occasionally a small ration of molasses. While here "election day" came, "Little Mack" having been nominated, and Lincoln re-nominated for the presidency; a few of our men attempted to harangue their fellows in favor of Lincoln's re-election, but they were speedily stopped by the guards. From Millen we were taken to a camp near Savannah for a short time, thence to Blackshear, Fla., for a few days, and finally to Florence, S. C. Time wore heavily and we became reduced by scanty rations. Much time was spent in talking of the prospect of once more breathing the air under the "stars and stripes," where we could have enough to eat and clothing to keep us warm. Much time was spent in warring against lice and mosquitos by day and fleas at night, until it became too cold for mosquitos, then our sleep was disturbed by dreams of blankets for bedding and sights of eatables of all kinds, and like the "Mirage of the Desert" to disappear on awakening. Starvation will unman the strongest person, and he will commit petty acts to get a morsel, which otherwise would never have been thought of. I could endure the prison life on such fare tolerably well, no physical labor being required, until cold weather came, then, with scanty covering, the nights were long, tedious and uncomfortably cold. Little pastime was engaged in, for as half-starved domestic animals are not known to frolic and play, so the men in Southern prisons were "grim visaged" and of "sober mien."

With few exceptions, each man was intent on looking after his own welfare. Some of the prisoners would fight for a morsel of food or a chew of tobacco. It was estimated that thirty thousand were confined at Andersonville, representing all branches of the service. Florence, S. C., was the last prison I was in. One day the different divisions were called in line, in open ranks, and the doctors passed between to pick out the sick and feeble, to be paroled, and they were placed under guard, aside from the main body. Although I was passed by as "rugged" enough to stay, yet, when the doctor's back was turned, I unconcernedly left the ranks and joined the invalids, the guards being none the wiser. And so, on the 13th of December, I left the Southern prison, still occupied by hundreds of sufferers, and the next day reached Charleston, and went on board the United States transport "Varuna" in Charleston Harbor, bound for Annapolis, Md. We felt happy inwardly, though too much reduced physically to show it. When once on board the transport, we were stripped and were given a change of clothing, casting our prison clothes, with their countless creeping inhabitants, into the sea. Our voyage North was without event, except a great amount of heaving overboard of the contents of our inside bread-baskets. For many days it was impossible to appease our appetites, and we heard of one or two cases of death from over-eating. From Annapolis I was furloughed home for thirty days, with orders to report at Camp Chase, Ohio, at the expiration of my leave. In the spring we rejoined our several regiments, took part in the Grand Review at Washington, and as the "cruel war was over," we were mustered out of "Uncle Sam's" service, and went on our several ways, rejoicing that peace had come, and that the question of "Secession of States" had been settled.

OSCAR AKELEY.

I was taken prisoner at Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864, after being wounded. I was transferred to a hospital at Richmond, and cared for and nursed by my fellow-prisoners, and have little cause to complain of my treatment, but the rations were very scant and of poor quality. After spending seventy days in the prison hospital I was sent to Camp Parole. While there I saw and heard very much of the effects of the horrible prison life. While it is impossible to draw a true picture, there are many others who can do far better than I. If Americans can forgive and forget, the men in charge of those horrid holes will never receive their reward until the Judgment day, and from the hand of a just God.

ANDERSONVILLE.

(From a Report made by CLARA BARTON To the People of the United States of America.)

This woman, who has become known and honored among all civilized nations, began a search for the missing men of the United States Army in March of 1865, under the sanction of President Lincoln, became acquainted with an ex-prisoner named Dorence Atwater, who had been a prisoner at Belle Isle and Andersonville twenty-two months and had been charged by the Rebel authorities with the duty of keeping the Death Register of the Union prisoners, who died at the last-named prison. After a consultation with Comrade Atwater, she conceived the idea of identifying the graves by comparing the numbered posts with a register which had been made by him and which he had succeeded in preserving. With this object in view her proposition was laid before Secretary Stanton and approved by him, and by his order an expedition was fitted out with men and materials for the purpose of designating the graves and inclosing the grounds with a fence. Miss Barton was invited to accompany the expedition, which left Washington on the 8th of July and arrived at Andersonville July 25. I am indebted to this lady for many acts of kindly interest in my work, and having no doubt that her description of Andersonville, immediately after the war, will be especially interesting to the reader, I take pleasure in giving it.

“ We found the prison grounds, stockade, hospital sheds and the various minor structures, almost in the same condition in which they had been evacuated ; and care is taken to have these historic monuments undisturbed, so long as the elements will spare them. There is not, and never was any town or village at this place except what grew out of its military occupation. Anderson Station, on the railroad from Macon to Eufala, was selected as a depot for prisoners, probably on account of its remoteness and possible security, and the prison itself, with the buildings which sprang up around it, constituted all there was of Andersonville. The land around it is broken and undulating, and at the time of the occupation was covered with forests, mostly of the long-leaved pine, common to the uplands of the South. The bases of the hills are lined with oozy springs, which unite to form little rivulets, one of which winds sluggishly through each of the intervening marshy valleys. The original inclosure of nineteen acres was made in the unbroken woods ; and the timber was only removed as it was wanted for the necessities of the prison. The inclosure was made in January, 1864, and enlarged, during the summer, to twenty five and three-fourths acres, being a quadrangle 1,295 by 865 feet. The greatest length is from north to south, the ground rising from the middle toward each end in rather a steep, rounded hill, the northern one being at once the highest and of the greatest extent. A small stream, rising from springs a little to the eastward, flows across it, through a narrow valley filled with compost washed down by the rains.

"The inclosing stockade is formed by pine logs, twenty feet in length, and about eight inches in diameter, sunk five feet into the ground, and placed close together. This is again surrounded by two successive and precisely similar palisades, a portion of the last of which is gone. It seems never to have been completed. The two inner walls remain entire. Within the interior space, at the distance of about seventeen feet from the stockade, runs the famous dead line, marked by small posts set in the ground, and a slight strip of pine board nailed on the tops of them. The gates, of which there are two, situated on the west side, were continuations of the stockade, inclosing spaces of thirty feet square, more or less, with massive doors at either end. They were arranged and worked on the principle of canal locks. Upon the inner stockade were fifty-two sentry boxes, raised above the tops of the palisades, and accessible to the guard by ladders.

"In these stood fifty-two guards, with loaded arms, so near that they could converse with each other. In addition to these, seven forts, mounted with field artillery, commanded the fatal space and its masses of perishing men. Under the most favorable circumstances, and best possible management, the supply of water would have been insufficient for half the number of persons using it. The sole establishments for cooking and baking were placed on the bank of the stream, immediately above, and between the two inner lines of palisades. The grease and refuse from them were found adhering to the banks at the time of our visit. The guards, to the number of about 3,600, were principally encamped on the upper part of the stream, and when the heavy rains washed down the hillsides, covered with 30,000 human beings, and the outlet below failed to discharge the flood which backed and filled the valley, the water must have become so foul and loathsome, that every statement I have seen of its offensiveness must be considered as falling short of the reality, and yet, within rifle shot of the prison there flowed a stream, fifteen feet wide and three feet deep, of pure, delicious water. Had the prison been placed so as to include a section of the 'Sweet Water Creek,' the inmates might have drank and bathed to their hearts' content. * * * Five sheds stand on the top of the northern hill, erected in the early part of the occupation, and five more on the opposite height, built a short time before the evacuation.

"Like nearly all southern land, the soil is liable to be washed away by the rains; and on the slopes of the hills, ravines are now formed, gullied to the depth of twelve feet. It seems impossible that men could have kept their footing on these hillsides, when slippery with rain. Outside of the inclosure, and nearly paralled with its south end, is the hospital stockade, 800 feet by 350. It contains twenty-two sheds, for the most part without sides, erected about three months before the place was abandoned. The old hospital, occupied up to that time, in which so many brave men died, consisted only of tents inclosed by a board fence, and surrounded by a guard. Confused heaps of rubbish alone mark the place it occupied. About half a mile from the main prison, and near Anderson Station, is the officers' stockade, a small inclosure, in which were never imprisoned more than 250 officers, and it was chiefly used for the confinement of Rebel offenders. The cemetery, around which the chief interest must gather, is distant about 300 yards from the stockade in a north-west-erly direction. The graves, placed side by side in close, continuous rows, cover nine acres, divided into three unequal lots by two roads, which intersect each other nearly at right angles. The fourth space is still unoccupied, except by a few graves of 'Confederate soldiers.'"

Since the visit of Miss Barton and the party commissioned to identify the graves, our government has replaced the wooden head-boards, set up at that time, by neat marble stones, and converted the grounds into a neat cemetery. That the graves of over twelve thousand Union men can be designated by name is owing to the list made and preserved by Dorence Atwater and the humane effort of Clara Barton.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

"THE DEATH RETURN."

"Azrael! Azrael! Azrael tested them!
 See those pale shadows!
 Can they be the rest of them?
 Look at them! GHOSTS!
 Who are riding abreast of them,
 If you would know of them,
 Some of the best of them,
 Chosen by death,
 When he made a fierce test of them.
 Look through the years
 Of the war eagle's track,

Look at the head-stones
 That lie in the track,
 All wet with hot tears
 When they did not come back."
